Syria
Exercise of authority in recaptured areas

Country of Origin Information Report

January 2020
Syria
Exercise of authority in recaptured areas

Country of Origin Information Report

January 2020

ISBN: 978-92-9485-161-1
doi: 10.2847/651962

© European Asylum Support Office (EASO) 2020
Reproduction is authorised, provided the source is acknowledged, unless otherwise stated.
For third-party materials reproduced in this publication, reference is made to the copyrights statements of the respective third parties.

Cover photo: © Amer Almohibany/AFP/Getty Images, A Syrian child stands in a school that was partially damaged in a reported air strike on March 7, 2017, in the rebel-held town of Utaya, in the eastern Ghouta region on the outskirts of the capital Damascus, url
Acknowledgements

EASO would like to acknowledge the Norwegian Country of Origin Information Centre, Landinfo, as the drafter of this report.

The following departments and organisations have reviewed the report together with the EASO COI Sector:

- The Netherlands, Office for Country Information and Language Analysis, Ministry of Justice
- ACCORD, the Austrian Centre for Country of Origin and Asylum Research and Documentation

It must be noted that the review carried out by the mentioned departments, experts or organisations contributes to the overall quality of the report but does not necessarily imply their formal endorsement of the final report, which is the full responsibility of EASO.
Contents

Acknowledgements ........................................................................................................... 3
Contents ............................................................................................................................. 4
Disclaimer ........................................................................................................................... 6
Glossary and Abbreviations ............................................................................................... 7
Introduction ......................................................................................................................... 8
  Methodology .................................................................................................................. 8
  Sources ......................................................................................................................... 8
  Quality control .............................................................................................................. 8
  Structure and use of the report ...................................................................................... 9
Map .................................................................................................................................... 10
1. Background .................................................................................................................... 11

2. Reconciliation agreements ......................................................................................... 12
   2.1 Criticism of the reconciliation agreements .......................................................... 12
   2.2 Sieges ..................................................................................................................... 13
   2.3 De-escalation zones ............................................................................................. 13
   2.4 Different reconciliation agreements .................................................................... 15
   2.5 ‘Sorting out of affairs’ (taswiyat al-wada) ........................................................... 16
   2.5.1 The process of sorting out affairs for individuals ........................................... 16
   2.5.2 Non-individual agreements ............................................................................ 18
   2.5.3 Groups and individuals that are denied or do not enter into agreements ....... 18
   2.6 Corruption ........................................................................................................... 20
   2.7 Military service .................................................................................................... 20
      2.7.1 Forms of military service .............................................................................. 21
3. After the reconciliation agreement ............................................................................ 22
   3.1 Damascus and Ghouta/Rural Damascus ............................................................. 22
      3.1.1 Darayya ........................................................................................................... 22
      3.1.2 Muadamiyat al-Sham ................................................................................... 23
      3.1.3 Qudsaya ......................................................................................................... 24
      3.1.4 Madaya/Zabdatani ....................................................................................... 25
      3.1.5 Douma ............................................................................................................ 28
      3.1.6 Yalda, Babila and Bayt Sahm ....................................................................... 30
      3.1.7 Qadam ............................................................................................................ 31
      3.1.8 Yarmouk and Hajar al-Aswad ..................................................................... 32
Disclaimer

This report was written according to the EASO COI Report Methodology (2019)\(^1\). The report is based on carefully selected sources of information. All sources used are referenced.

The information contained in this report has been researched, evaluated and analysed with utmost care. However, this document does not claim to be exhaustive. If a particular event, person or organisation is not mentioned in the report, this does not mean that the event has not taken place or that the person or organisation does not exist.

Furthermore, this report is not conclusive as to the determination or merit of any particular application for international protection. Terminology used should not be regarded as indicative of a particular legal position.

‘Refugee’, ‘risk’ and similar terminology are used as generic terminology and not in the legal sense as applied in the EU Asylum Acquis, the 1951 Refugee Convention and the 1967 Protocol relating to the Status of Refugees.

Neither EASO nor any person acting on its behalf may be held responsible for the use which may be made of the information contained in this report.

Glossary and Abbreviations

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Abbreviation</th>
<th>Full Form</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>GoS</td>
<td>Government of Syria</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>HTS</td>
<td>Hay’at Tahrir al-Sham</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>IS</td>
<td>The Islamic State (IS); also known as Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant (ISIL), Islamic State of Iraq and Syria (ISIS), or Daesh.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>NDF</td>
<td>National Defence Forces</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>SAA</td>
<td>Syrian Arab Army</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>SANA</td>
<td>Syrian Arab News Agency</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>SARC</td>
<td>Syrian Arab Crescent</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>SOHR</td>
<td>Syrian Observatory of Human Rights</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>UNOCHA</td>
<td>United Nations Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>UNRWA</td>
<td>United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Introduction

This report was drafted by Country of Origin Information (COI) specialists from the Norwegian Country of Origin Information Centre, Landinfo, as listed under the Acknowledgements section.

This report concerns the Syrian territories, which have been outside the control of the Government of Syria (GoS) and returned to GoS control through so-called reconciliation agreements. It explores how these agreements were reached, their consequences for the population of the respective areas, as well as how GoS exerts its control in the aftermath. Not all areas/cities are included, but rather a selection that serves to illustrate the different developments.

Methodology

This report is produced in line with the EASO COI Report Methodology (2019)\(^2\) and the EASO COI Writing and Referencing Style Guide (2019).\(^3\)

The report covers the period from 2014 until October 2019. The drafting of this report was finalised on 1 October 2019. Some additional information was added during the finalisation of this report in response to feedback received during the quality control process until 28 October 2019.

Terms of Reference for this report can be found in the annex of this report.

Sources

The sources used in this report include local and regional media coverage of the signing of the so-called reconciliation agreements, as well as analyses of and comments on these agreements by academics with in-depth knowledge of Syria.

The report also draws heavily on conversations and interviews conducted by Landinfo with international organisations and local actors on its fact-finding missions in the spring of 2018 and in April 2019. These sources are further described in the Bibliography section.

In the context of the Syrian conflict, media coverage in both Syrian and international media must be carefully weighed against each other; a major research challenge. The topics addressed in this report are highly politicised, and many media are openly or secretly affiliated to one of the sides in the conflict. This means that there will often be conflicting information about a given incident, and Landinfo has, as far as possible, attempted to provide as multi-faceted a description of the situation as possible. It was difficult or impossible for Landinfo to verify some of the information conveyed by the media. However, Landinfo has tried to verify the information to the best of its ability.

Quality control

In order to ensure that the report respects the EASO COI Report Methodology, a review was carried out by COI specialists from the countries and organisations listed as reviewers in the Acknowledgements section.

\(^2\) EASO, EASO Country of Origin Information (COI) Report Methodology, June 2019, url
\(^3\) EASO, Writing and Referencing Guide for EASO Country of Origin Information (COI) Reports, June 2019, url
Structure and use of the report

This report starts with a brief introduction to the areas covered and then describes the so-called reconciliation-agreements, which constitute the formal framework for reintegrating these formerly opposition-held areas into the state. It describes the different variants of the agreements, and their main implications for the population.

It then examines in some detail how these agreements have worked out in a number of towns and districts, highlighting both similarities and differences in their implementation and the reasons for these. The last chapter provides a couple of examples of recaptured areas where no reconciliation-agreement governs their reintegration into the state.

The situation in Syria remains unstable, even in parts of the country where the state has been in control throughout the conflict and in areas formerly held by the opposition. This should be borne in mind while reading the report, as this provides an important insight into the strategy of the Syrian state for dealing with these areas, and the impacts on the population.
Map

Map 1: Syria, ©United Nations

4 Syria, Map No. 4204 Rev. 3, April 2012, United Nations, url
1. Background

The uprising in Syria started in spring 2011 and developed into a civil war in a relatively short space of time. Areas of the country were captured by different armed groups in opposition to the Government of Syria (hereinafter GoS), and many of these areas were outside the control of the GoS for several years. At the same time, the Islamic State (IS) took control of large parts of the country, from the Turkish border at Jarablus, to Mari, as well as both sides of Lake Asad, al-Tabqa and Raqqa, and the areas on both sides of the Euphrates river down to the Iraqi border at al-Qaim. GoS managed throughout this period to keep control over a small pocket of land on the western side of the river at Deir Ez Zor, including parts of the city itself.\(^5\)

The aforementioned previously IS-held areas were eventually captured from IS by US-backed Kurdish forces, and as of October 2019, still remained outside GoS control, except for the areas south of the Euphrates River, which is mostly desert. As of October 2019, Idlib governorate, as well as parts of Hama, Latakia and Aleppo governorates were still outside GoS control.\(^6\)

Other areas of the country that were previously outside GoS control, such as Daraa in the south, and areas in Rural Damascus, are now back under government control.\(^7\) This report describes how the GoS regained control of these areas through so-called reconciliation agreements, and how this has affected the local population.

---

\(^5\) Liveuamap, Syria, 18 October 2015, [url]
\(^6\) Liveuamap, Syria, 1 October 2019, [url]
\(^7\) Liveuamap, Syria, 1 October 2019, [url]
2. Reconciliation agreements

GoS has entered into reconciliation agreements (Arabic: ittifaqat musalaha) with different actors in most of the areas the government forces have recaptured from various anti-government groups in the last few years.

During the first years of the war, the government pursued a strategy of negotiating local ceasefire agreements; subsequently it did so with the encouragement of UN Special Envoy Staffan de Mistura. He and others believed that this would reduce acts of violence\(^8\), in a war where neither party seemed to be winning.\(^9\)

The agreements were often brokered with Russian or Iranian help, but they were also negotiated directly by GoS in some places. In many cases, local people in influential positions negotiated the deals on behalf of the rebel groups.\(^10\)

GoS established a dedicated ministry for reconciliation as early as 2012, and Ali Haidar was appointed Minister of State for National Reconciliation Affairs.\(^11\) Reconciliation agreements became a main component of the strategy to recapture areas when Russia became increasingly involved in the war in 2015.\(^12\) In February 2016, Russia established the Russian Centre for the Reconciliation of Opposing Sides in the Syrian Arab Republic, operated from Hmeimim military air base outside Jableh, on the Mediterranean Coast.\(^13\) The name was later changed to the Russian Centre for Reconciliation of Opposing Sides and Refugee Migration Monitoring.\(^14\)

The agreements have a number of characteristics in common, although they vary from outright capitulation agreements to more genuine reconciliation agreements. The balance of power on the ground largely determined the content of the agreements.\(^15\) In strategically important areas for the GoS, and areas where it has been under pressure, GoS has been more willing to make concessions than in areas where the opposition has been more divided and incapable of acting concertedly.\(^16\) Another factor that has reportedly influenced the negotiations on the many different agreements has been pressure from a population tired of war; a population that has had to live under prolonged sieges and bombardment in many cases.\(^17\)

2.1 Criticism of the reconciliation agreements

The Syrian opposition has long criticised these agreements, claiming that they are not about reconciliation, but are outright capitulation agreements. Nor does GoS attempt to conceal the fact

---

\(^8\) Sosnowski, M., Besiege, bombard, retake: Reconciliation agreements in Syria, Middle East Eye, 28 March 2018, url

\(^9\) Reuters, Syrian opposition must accept it has not won the war, 6 September 2017, url

\(^10\) Adleh, F. and Favier, A., “Local reconciliation agreements” in Syria: A non-starter for peacebuilding, European University Institute, June 2017, url, p. 8

\(^12\) Adleh, F. and Favier, A., “Local reconciliation agreements” in Syria: A non-starter for peacebuilding, European University Institute, June 2017, url, p. 1

\(^14\) See Ministry of Defence of the Russian Federation, Bulletins of the Centre for Reconciliation of Opposing Sides and Refugee Migration Monitoring in Syrian Arab Republic, n.d, url

\(^16\) Hinnebusch, R., and Imady, O., Syria’s reconciliation agreements, Centre for Syrian Studies. University of St. Andrews, 12 February 2017, url, pp. 7-10

\(^17\) Hinnebusch, R., and Imady, O., Syria’s reconciliation agreements, Centre for Syrian Studies. University of St. Andrews, 12 February 2017, url, p. 2 that its motivation for entering into such agreements is to regain control of areas held by the armed opposition.18

One of the opposition’s main objections has been that GoS fails to fulfil its obligations under the agreements, and that it uses them to exact revenge on members of the opposition who sign such agreements. In other areas, it may be a case of GoS not honouring its promise to restore infrastructure, or of militias being given free rein.19

Chapter 3 provides more discussion on criticism of the agreements, along with a description of the different areas and reconciliation processes.

2.2 Sieges

A common characteristic of all the areas with reconciliation agreements in place is that during the period before signing the agreements, they were under siege, in many cases, for several years.20 The circumstances surrounding such sieges varied from one area to the next, and with time. In many cases, it was at times possible for the population to cross over from a rebel-held area under siege to areas under GoS control. This was possible for individuals who had no outstanding issues with the government, primarily women and children, but also students.21

An economy based on smuggling goods emerged in many of the former rebel-held areas, a highly profitable business for all parties in the conflict.22

2.3 De-escalation zones

As of spring 2017, four major areas in Syria were not under GoS control, in addition to the areas controlled by the Kurdish-led Syrian Democratic Forces (SDF) and IS:

- Idlib province (including parts of Aleppo, Hama and Latakia provinces)
- Large parts of Daraa province and some of Quneitra
- Ghouta east of Damascus
- Northern parts of Homs province23

The context here was that GoS, with the aid of Russia and Iran, had retaken the last rebel-held pockets of Aleppo in 2016, which was seen as a serious setback for the opposition.24

At that time, several rounds of negotiations had been attempted to try to bring an end to the war, without lasting results being achieved. After Russian forces became heavily involved on the GoS side in 2015, they slowly and gradually succeeded in stopping advances by the rebel groups. The loss of Aleppo led to a much stronger willingness to reach a negotiated solution to the war, particularly on the part of Turkey, the rebels’ foremost supporter25, which had realigned with Russia.26

---

18 Ezzi, M., How the Syrian regime is using the mask of ‘reconciliation’ to destroy opposition institutions, Chatham House, June 2017, url
19 Hall, N., The aftershocks of reconciliation in Syria: Reflections on the past year, Atlantic Council, 17 April 2019, url; Reuters, Syrian city’s rebel district still in ruins years after Assad victory, 18 August 2017, url
20 AI, 'We Leave or We Die': Forced Displacement under Syria’s ‘Reconciliation’ Agreements, 2017, url, p. 6
21 Landinfo interviews with an International organisation (a) in Damascus, March 2018 and April 2019
22 Asfar, R., The lucrative business of smuggling supplies into Syria’s besieged Eastern Ghouta, PRI, 27 April 2017, url
23 Based on reading of the map in ISW, Syria Situation Report: May 10 – 18, 2017, 19 May 2017, url
24 Naharnet, Aleppo recapture deals setback to Gulf rebel backers, 23 December 2016, url
25 NO-Landinfo drafter assessment
The foreign ministers of Russia, Iran and Turkey agreed to meet for initial peace talks in Astana, the capital of Kazakhstan, in December 2016, and, in January 2017, representatives of 12 anti-government factions participated in negotiations for the first time. Their delegation was led by Muhammad Alloush, the leader of Jaysh al-Islam, an organisation that controlled large parts of Eastern Ghouta outside Damascus.27

The Astana process resulted in an agreement that was signed by representatives of Russia, Iran and Turkey in May 2017. It stipulated the establishment of four ‘de-escalation zones’ in areas not controlled by GoS, listed above.28 Many rebel representatives walked out of the agreement, and USA was also not involved in the negotiations beforehand. Initially, the agreement was supposed to lead to a complete ceasefire and ensure access to emergency relief and other humanitarian aid in these areas. It also envisaged agreement at a later stage on how the ceasefire would be monitored and complied with in practice.29

An important point in both this and earlier agreements was that some ‘terrorist organisations’ would not be covered by the agreement. In practice, this meant that Hay’at Tahrir al-Sham (HTS) (formerly known as the al-Nusra Front, the Syrian branch of Al-Qaeda), and Islamic State (IS) were not parties to the agreement, and that they continued to be legitimate targets for Syrian, Russian and Iranian forces.30 Both HTS and IS groups are designated as sanctioned organisations by the UN Security Council for involvement in terrorism.31

Agreement was eventually reached on the delimitation of the zones, and in Idlib, Russian, Iranian and Turkish forces established checkpoints to ensure that the agreement was respected.32 In autumn 2017 and early 2018, GoS and Russian forces intensified both the siege and bombing of Eastern Ghouta, and in spring 2018, the area was captured by GoS.33 Later that same year, the rest of Daraa province also came under GoS control.34 As of summer 2019, Idlib is the only one of the four de-escalation zones that still remains.35 The area faces a highly uncertain future,36 especially because HTS largely controlled the entire province as of October 2019 reporting.37 The group took control of the area in January 2019, after other rebel groups more or less collapsed,38 and withdrew to the Afrin area, which is controlled by Turkey39 and rebel groups that it supports.40

---

27 Guardian (The), Russia in power-broking role as peace talks begin in Astana, 23 January 2017, [url]; Reuters, Syria attack triggered Western action, bur on the ground Assad gained, 16 April 2018, [url]
28 Hinnebusch, R., and Imady, O., Syria’s reconciliation agreements, Centre for Syrian Studies, University of St. Andrews, 12 February 2017, [url], pp. 2-3
29 WSJ, Russia, Turkey and Iran Sign Syria ‘De-Escalation Zone’ Deal, 4 May 2017, [url]; AP News, Russia, Iran, Turkey sign on ‘de-escalation zones’ in Syria, 4 May 2017, [url]
30 Hanna, A., Russia muscles in on de-escalation zones, Chatham House, October 2017, [url]; Al Jazeera, Syria’s de-escalation zones: ‘We don’t trust Russia’, 9 May 2017, [url]
32 Karasapan, O. M., The Idlib agreement and other pieces of the Syrian puzzle, Brookings Institution, 17 September 2018, [url]; R.I, Losing Their Last Refuge; Inside Idlib’s humanitarian nightmare, September 2019, [url], p. 8
33 Telegraph (The), Syrian flag flying over onetime rebel stronghold Douma as Russians announce victory in Eastern Ghouta, 12 April 2018, [url]
34 Maayeh, S., and Hares, N., The fall of Daraa, Foreign Affairs, 23 July 2018, [url]
35 Karasapan, O. M., The Idlib agreement and other pieces of the Syrian puzzle, Brookings Institution, 17 September 2018, [url]
36 Middle East Institute, Idlib’s Uncertain Future, n.d., [url]; Portal (The), Uncertain future for Idlib as Turkey-Russia talks drag on, 21 May 2019, [url]; New Turkey (The), Idlib’s Crumbling Ceasefire is a Frightening Prospect for Civilians, 7 August 2019, [url]
37 Washington Post (The), Islamic State leader Baghdadi hid among rivals and enemies in rebel-held Syrian province, 28 October 2019, [url]
38 Walker, P. J., Consequences of the HTS take-over in northwest Syria, Atlantic Council, 30 January 2019, [url]
39 Al-Hilu, Khayrallah, Afrin Under Turkish Control: Political, Social and Economic Transformations, European University Institute, 25 July 2019, [url], p. 3
40 BBC, Syria war: Why does the battle for Idlib matter?, 4 June 2019, [url]
2.4 Different reconciliation agreements

Below is an overview, with examples, of what the reconciliation agreements looked like; however, the list is in no way exhaustive. The content of the agreements was largely determined by the balance of power on the ground in areas where such agreements have been signed. In a 2017 report, prominent Syria researchers Raymond Hinnebusch and Omar Imady outlined four different types of agreements:

- The most unbalanced form described consisted of agreements whereby the population of a given area was evacuated and the demographic balance changed. We find an example of such an agreement in Zabadani, a city located close to the Lebanese border in Rural Damascus governorate.\textsuperscript{41} The area is of high strategic importance, not just to GoS, but also to the Lebanese Hezbollah, which has made active contributions to the war on the GoS side.\textsuperscript{42} In this case, the agreement included the evacuation of Fuah and Kafriya, two besieged pro-government Shia villages in Idlib province, in other words a form of population exchange.\textsuperscript{43} The inhabitants of Zabadani were evacuated to the neighbouring city of Madaya, which at the time was also outside GoS control\textsuperscript{44}, or to rebel-held areas in Idlib province. The inhabitants of Fuah and Kafriya were evacuated to Aleppo, which is controlled by GoS.\textsuperscript{45} The agreement was brokered by Ahrar al-Sham and HTS, on the one hand, and GoS, Hezbollah and Iran, on the other.\textsuperscript{46}

- A ‘somewhat less punitive’ agreement described is one where parts of the population were allowed to stay in the area, while militant groups and others who did not accept GoS conditions were evacuated\textsuperscript{47}, usually to Idlib province.\textsuperscript{48} Some were undoubtedly evacuated against their will, for example members of the White Helmets organisation, which GoS accuses of being terrorists.\textsuperscript{49} Local religious Islamist leaders, who previously worked with the opposition as part of the Sharia legal system, were in some cases co-opted by GoS. Some of them have later took part in negotiations on similar agreements elsewhere.\textsuperscript{50}

- A ‘more balanced’ type of agreement described is one where the rebels remain in control of an area, but surrendered heavier weapons. They also pledged not to attack GoS forces. In return, GoS committed to lifting the blockade, returning displaced people and restoring services for the population. Hinnebusch and Imady mentioned Barzeh in Damascus as an example of a place where this type of agreement was signed in June 2014. An important factor in relation to agreements where GoS was willing to make significant concessions to the rebels is that the rebels have enjoyed a relatively strong position, and that the areas they hold are strategically important.\textsuperscript{51}

- The fourth variant described is a type of agreement that can hardly be called a reconciliation agreement\textsuperscript{52}, but that is more a ceasefire agreement. In these cases, the opposition controlled an area with one or more natural resources on which GoS is completely dependent. An

---

\textsuperscript{41} Hinnebusch, R., and Imady, O., Syria’s reconciliation agreements, Centre for Syrian Studies. University of St. Andrews, 12 February 2017, url, p. 7
\textsuperscript{42} Alami, M., Hezbollah’s military involvement in Syria and its wider regional role, March 2017, url, p. 18
\textsuperscript{43} Arfeh, H., The institutionalization of demographic change in Syria, Atlantic Council, 4 April 2019, url
\textsuperscript{44} Al, 'We Leave or We Die': Forced Displacement under Syria’s ‘Reconciliation’ Agreements, 2017, url, p. 61
\textsuperscript{45} Reuters, Evacuations from besieged Syrian towns end after two-day halt, 21 April 2017, url
\textsuperscript{46} Arfeh, H., The institutionalization of demographic change in Syria, Atlantic Council, 4 April 2019, url
\textsuperscript{47} Hinnebusch, R., and Imady, O., Syria’s reconciliation agreements, Centre for Syrian Studies. University of St. Andrews, 12 February 2017, url, p. 8
\textsuperscript{48} Time, Idlib could be the last major battlefield of the Syrian civil war. But Assad won’t take it easily, 16 August 2018, url
\textsuperscript{49} Al Aswad, H., Daraa’s White Helmets: Far from safe and fleeing for Northern Syria, Middle East Eye, 1 August 2018, url
\textsuperscript{50} Hinnebusch, R., and Imady, O., Syria’s reconciliation agreements, Centre for Syrian Studies. University of St. Andrews, 12 February 2017, url, p. 8
\textsuperscript{51} Hinnebusch, R., and Imady, O., Syria’s reconciliation agreements, Centre for Syrian Studies. University of St. Andrews, 12 February 2017, url, p. 8
\textsuperscript{52} NO-Landinfo drafter assessment example given is Wadi Barada outside Damascus, where rebels controlled the water spring supplying the whole of Damascus. Here, an agreement was signed that stipulated that GoS would not intervene in the city or the area at all, in return for the rebels ensuring that the water supply would function as normal. After the rebels had repeatedly cut off the water supply to pressure GoS into meeting their demands, including the release of prisoners, GoS invaded the area. The same has happened in other places, such as Aleppo, where rebels controlled an important power plant.53

2.5 ‘Sorting out of affairs’ (taswiyat al-wada)

‘Sorting out of affairs’ or legalising one’s status (Arabic: taswiyat al- wada) are the terms GoS uses to describe the process of reconciling with the government as an individual, as a result of the different reconciliation agreements54, or through individual agreements, for persons who wish to return to Syria after having left illegally, such as via an unofficial border crossing.55 For GoS, these agreements were about regaining control of the parts of the country that have been outside government control.56

For the part of the population that chose to stay in an area covered by an agreement, this ‘sorting out of affairs’ primarily concerns two things:

- If they have been part of an armed group that has fought GoS, authorities must clarify whether they will be allowed to stay, and, if so, on what terms.57
- Men of conscription age must serve in the military, and those called up for service in the reserve force must complete it.58

2.5.1 The process of sorting out affairs for individuals

Though this process can vary in practice, under all circumstances59, representatives of a security service were reported to be present to receive applications to sort out/clarify individuals’ outstanding issues with GoS.60

A source from August 2018 indicated that prior to this, a committee comprising GoS representatives and local intermediaries registers the names of activists and rebels who wish to remain in the area in question.61 Who was assigned the role of being the local intermediaries varied. Sometimes, representatives of local rebel groups were part of the negotiation committee, but also well-known figures such as local doctors or members of the local council usually took part. The local GoS participants were often individuals with formal influence and status, for example, mayors, governors

54 SANA, Taswiyat awda’ 510 askhhas min madinat al-Sanamayn baynahum 150 musallahah sallamu anfusahum waspilhatahum lil-jihat al-mukhtassa [510 persons from the city al-Sanamayn assessed their situation, including 150 armed persons who surrendered and handed in weapons to relevant agencies], 25 December 2016, url; Haid, H., The details of ‘reconciliation deals’ expose how they are anything but, Chatham House, August 2018, url
55 Syrian Embassy in Stockholm, Al-qism al-qusuli, khidamat ukhra: khamisan: taswiyat al wada’a bi-sabab al-mughadara ghayr al-shari’ya (The Consular section, other services: Fifth: Sorting out/legalizing the status for having left the country illegally), n.d., url
57 Haid, H., The details of ‘reconciliation deals’ expose how they are anything but, Chatham House, August 2018, url
58 Ezzi, M., How the Syrian regime is using the mask of ‘reconciliation’ to destroy opposition institutions, Chatham House, June 2017, url
59 NO-Landinfo drafter assessment
60 Haid, H., The details of ‘reconciliation deals’ expose how they are anything but, Chatham House, August 2018, url
61 Haid, H., The details of ‘reconciliation deals’ expose how they are anything but, Chatham House, August 2018, url and other government officials. Clan and tribal leaders participated in areas of the country where they were influential.

Haid also reported in 2018 that simultaneously with names being registered, local pro-GoS intermediaries and the part of the security service responsible for the area started opening offices to consider applications from individuals who wished to surrender.

The formal process known as ‘resolving status’ typically involves interrogation about previous opposition activities (such as participating in protests, relief work in rebel-held areas or fighting with rebels), many of which fall under the GoS expansive definition of ‘terrorism’. Additionally, it involves a pledge to abstain from these actions in the future. Thereafter, the individual receives a clearance paper and the security agencies supposedly removed him/her from their lists of wanted persons.

2.5.1.1 Who needs to apply?
There were contradictory reports on who needs to undergo the ‘sorting out of affairs’ clarification process, according to a prominent researcher at Chatham House, Syrian national Haid Haid. He mentioned in his 2018 article that some sources claimed that everyone between the ages of 18 and 55, both women and men, must complete the required forms, while other sources claimed that only ‘those who were affiliated with anti-regime groups or their international supporters, such as civil society, armed groups, media or the political opposition’ needed to do so.

Landinfo assesses that this reflects genuine differences in the requirements that apply from one area to the next, dictated by factors such as the degree of Russian involvement in the process and the level of anti-government activities in the area.

2.5.1.2 Document requirements
Landinfo does not know whether a standardised set of forms is used, or whether the forms that need to be completed vary from one area to the next. However, Landinfo assessed that the information the applicants need to provide is more or less the same in the various areas.

A source describing procedures in Deir Ez Zor mentioned that everyone must bring a copy of their national ID card (both sides), as well as two passport photos, which must be submitted together with the reconciliation application forms, while another source describing the procedures in Dara’a wrote that one should bring a personal photo and an ID card.

Haid wrote in August 2018 that based on his information, the first application form contains questions about the applicant’s personal data, contact details, career history, political orientation, criminal record, if applicable, and travels abroad. The form also reportedly includes questions about relatives who are active opponents of the GoS.

According to Haid, the second form includes twelve questions ‘directly related to the applicant’s role in any anti-regime activities, including demonstrations, armed rebellion and terrorist activities’. The

---

62 Adleh, F. and Favier, A., “Local reconciliation agreements” in Syria: A non-starter for peacebuilding, European University Institute, June 2017, [url], pp. 7-8
63 Haid, H., The details of ‘reconciliation deals’ expose how they are anything but, Chatham House, August 2018, [url]
64 International Crisis Group, Lessons from the Syrian State’s Return to the South, 25 February 2019, [url], p. 2
65 Haid, H., The details of ‘reconciliation deals’ expose how they are anything but, Chatham House, August 2018, [url]
66 NO-Landinfo drafter assessment
67 NO-Landinfo drafter assessment
68 Hassan, M., How Russia and the regime manipulate the reconciliation process in Deir Ez-Zor Governorate, Chatham House, February 2019, [url]
69 International Crisis Group, Lessons from the Syrian state’s Return to the South, 25 February 2019, [url], p. 2
70 Haid, H., The details of ‘reconciliation deals’ expose how they are anything but, Chatham House, August 2018, [url]
applicant ‘is also asked about rebel groups in their areas, including the names of the leaders, their locations and activities, and the location of weapons’ and weapon depots.

According to Haid, the last section of the document enquires about secret tunnels, the names and locations of people kidnapped by rebel groups, the names, affiliations and roles of foreign members of rebel groups, their location and/or foreign governments supporting them.71

Finally, Haid reported that the applicant is asked to sign a statement ‘pledging not to carry out any actions against the state and its armed, security and auxiliary forces [pro-government militias] through the use of demonstrations, social media, anti-regime publications and media platforms, or armed rebellion’.72

2.5.1.3 Processing of applications

These papers are then sent to the branch of the security service responsible for the area, where the information is reportedly cross-checked against the information already available about the applicant. The information is ‘usually’ verified through local informants affiliated to the service. Haid noted that cross-checking of the information with the other intelligence branches ‘rarely’ occurs, given the rivalry between them.73 Landinfo does not know whether this verification process is carried out in all cases.

One source reported that once the verification process is completed, the applicant is provided with a document to prove that he has successfully undergone the clarification process. This document is usually required to pass through the country’s numerous checkpoints.74 One source mentions that applicants are first issued a temporary document that is only valid for a short period. They are also warned against leaving the area. After 7-10 days, a new document is issued, stating that the individual is no longer on the authorities’ wanted list.75 Landinfo could not verify if this document is valid at all checkpoints run by the different parts of the Syrian security apparatus.

2.5.2 Non-individual agreements

There is an example reported of a reconciliation agreement in the town of al-Sanamayn in Deraa where the parties agreed that the population must clarify their relationship with the government, but in the form of collective agreements (see section 3.2.1). This was applied to clans and large families, where representatives of these groups negotiated on behalf of the groups, without the individuals themselves being involved.76

2.5.3 Groups and individuals that are denied or do not enter into agreements

Not everyone can be party to a reconciliation agreement. This applies to individuals that have ‘Syrian blood on their hands’ as well as to those that are considered by GoS to be affiliated with terrorist groups like IS or HTS. Another condition of the reconciliation process is that it ‘shall not overturn criminal sentences that are unrelated to current events in Syria, or which are related to the rights of other Syrian civilians’.77 While the source above referred to the reconciliation-process in Deir Ez Zor, Landinfo assesses that the same conditions are used in connection to similar processes in other places in Syria.78

71 Haid, H., The details of ‘reconciliation deals’ expose how they are anything but, Chatham House, August 2018, url
72 Haid, H., The details of ‘reconciliation deals’ expose how they are anything but, Chatham House, August 2018, url
73 Haid, H., The details of ‘reconciliation deals’ expose how they are anything but, Chatham House, August 2018, url
74 Haid, H., The details of ‘reconciliation deals’ expose how they are anything but, Chatham House, August 2018, url
75 Hassan, M., How Russia and the regime manipulate the reconciliation process in Deir Ez-Zor Governorate, Chatham House, February 2019, url
76 Al Tamimi, A. J., Reconciliations: The case of al-Sanamayn in North-Deraa, 27 April 2017, url
77 Hassan, M., How Russia and the regime manipulate the reconciliation process in Deir Ez-Zor Governorate, Chatham House, February 2019, url
78 NO-Landinfo drafter assessment
Those who refuse the reconciliation agreement with GoS, as was the case for around 10 000 persons from Daraa and Quneitra governorates, were evacuated to areas under the armed opposition’s control in Idlib and northern Aleppo governorates. According to OHCHR ‘the evacuees included fighters and their families, as well as some who identified as journalists and humanitarian workers who claimed to fear being targeted and/or detained by GoS should they decide to remain in Dar’a’. 79

2.5.3.1 IS (Islamic State)
Sources reported that persons suspected of IS affiliation are not offered such reconciliation agreements, although GoS has on several occasions struck deals with the group and participated in the evacuation of its members.80 In May 2018, IS soldiers and their families were evacuated from Yarmouk Camp and Hajar al-Aswad in Damascus to areas that were then under IS control in the desert in Badiya, the huge area bordering on Jordan and Iraq.81

2.5.3.2 HTS (Hayat Tahrir al-Sham)
According to a 2016 source, members of HTS, formerly known as the al-Nusra Front and the Syrian branch of al-Qaeda, are also not included in reconciliation agreements.82 Members of this group and their families have been evacuated from different parts of the country to Idlib province, large parts of which have been under HTS control since 2018.83

2.5.3.3 The White Helmets
The Syrian government considers this group, also known as Syria Civil Defence, to be a terrorist organisation.84 The group itself denies this, emphasising that it is impartial, but it only works in rebel-held parts of the country. Members of the group have usually been evacuated to Idlib,85 but in July 2018, a few hundred people, including family members, were evacuated from the Golan Heights to Jordan by the Israeli military.86

2.5.3.4 Media activists and opposition journalists
This is a diverse group that includes many different profiles, from genuinely independent activists to journalists affiliated to various opposition media; and Landinfo assesses that it is usually not the government that explicitly denies persons in this group permission to stay, but rather the individuals themselves who ‘choose’ to leave.87 They fear that information they have written or communicated in other ways will be used against them by the authorities88 although a 2014 source reported that journalists in Syria used pseudonyms to avoid targeting by Islamic State and the GoS.89

2.5.3.5 Others
Sources reported cases of persons who have applied for reconciliation where GoS has denied these requests. Some 200 persons from Babila, Yalda and Bayt Sahm were denied reconciliation for ‘providing false information’, but the security services did not provide any indication as to which

79 OHCHR, The “unreconciled” concerns of civilians in Dar’a Governorate, May 2019, url, p. 3
80 Sabbour, O., How the Assad regime has exploited “evacuation deals” to redirect Isis against the rebels, 2019, url: Al Masdar News, Breaking: ISIS agrees to surrender all its territory in rural Hama to the Syrian Army, 21 September 2017, url
81 Asharq Al Awsat, ISIS militants evacuate from Southern Damascus to desert, 21 May 2018, url
82 Araabi, S. and Hilal, L., Reconciliation, Reward and Revenge Analyzing Syrian De-escalation Dynamics through Local Ceasefire Negotiations, Berghof Foundation, 2016, url, p. 31
83 Radio Free Europe, Dozens killed in blast in Syria’s Idlib, 12 August 2018, url
84 France 24, Syrian government lambasts evacuation of White Helmets as ‘criminal’, 23 July 2018, url
85 AP, Syrian White Helmets evacuated to Jordan through Israel, 22 July 2018, url
86 BBC, Syria conflict: White helmets evacuated by Israel, 22 July 2018, url
87 NO-Landinfo drafter assessment
88 Syria Direct, At least 270 journalists and media workers stranded in southwestern Syria as murky reconciliation deal unfolds, 10 July 2018, url; OHCHR, The “unreconciled” concerns of civilians in Dar’a Governorate, May 2019, url, p. 3
89 Sabbagh, R., Syria: Inside the world’s deadliest place for journalists, 3 December 2014, url information was considered false, nor how this conclusion was reached. They were asked to resubmit the forms at the local security-branch in charge of the area, which likely implied being detained.\textsuperscript{90} It has not been possible to obtain information about the fate of these persons.

The opposition outlet Enab Baladi likewise reported in September 2018 that around 400 persons from the Homs area were denied reconciliation. Several reasons for this were given by the National Security, among them that some of the persons in question would have joined Jabhat al-Nusra, later HTS, the Muslim Brotherhood, Ahrar al-Sham and Faylaq al-Sham. Others were accused of participating in videos shot during the fight against GoS-forces. It was not known which reprisals these persons would face.\textsuperscript{91}

\subsection*{2.6 Corruption}

It has been claimed that persons unqualified to sign reconciliation agreements, including persons who have held leading positions in IS, have nonetheless been allowed to undergo the process in exchange for sums of up to 20 million Syrian pounds (just under 100 000 USD). This money reportedly went to both Russian intermediaries, who facilitated many of the agreements, and leaders of intelligence branches in the districts concerned, in this case Deir Ez Zor.\textsuperscript{92}

The same report stated that another incentive for allowing such persons to undergo the reconciliation process and ignoring this corruption is that GoS would like to have them on its side to use as intermediaries in connection with future negotiations. Hassan mentioned an example in his February 2019 report involving four tribal figures in Deir Ez Zor province who had previously represented a ‘tribal office’ affiliated with IS. They were allowed to undergo reconciliation and were then permitted to work as intermediaries between the GoS and those wanting to undergo reconciliation.\textsuperscript{93}

One 2016 source reported that persons who stayed behind in formerly rebel-held parts of the country have subsequently been smuggled out of these areas to the wider Idlib area with the help of corrupt security service officers.\textsuperscript{94}

\subsection*{2.7 Military service}

Military service is mandatory for all men between the ages of 18 and 42\textsuperscript{95}, and draft evasion is a criminal offence. Through the years of conflict, the government has granted amnesty for draft evaders on a number of occasions. This means that they will not be punished but have to report to their enlistment office to start their military service.\textsuperscript{96}

In the south, in areas where reconciliation agreements have been signed, local agreements included a conscription ‘grace period’ of six months to take care of practical matters before starting their period of military service.\textsuperscript{97}

However, one source claimed that the process is different for mid-service GoS military/security force defectors than for civilians, including those who have not served their military service. For non-

\textsuperscript{90} Haid, H., The details of ‘reconciliation deals’ expose how they are anything but, Chatham House, August 2018, url
\textsuperscript{91} Enab Baladi, Al-nidham yarfud taswiat awda’a 400 shakhs fi rif Homs (The regime refuses the settling of the status of 400 persons from outer Homs), 24 September 2018, url
\textsuperscript{92} Hassan, M., How Russia and the regime manipulate the reconciliation process in Deir Ez-Zor Governorate, Chatham House, February 2019, url
\textsuperscript{93} Hassan, M., How Russia and the regime manipulate the reconciliation process in Deir Ez-Zor Governorate, Chatham House, February 2019, url
\textsuperscript{94} Syria Direct, After relentless bombardment, two northwest Damascus towns give up and the evacuations begin, 13 October 2016, url
\textsuperscript{95} TIMEP, TIMEP brief: Conscription law, 22 August 2019, url
\textsuperscript{96} Norway, Landinfo, Syria: Reaksjoner mot desertører og personer som unndrar seg militærtjeneste (Syria: Reactions against deserters and draft evaders), 3 January 2018, url, pp. 12-13
\textsuperscript{97} International Crisis Group, Lessons from the Syrian state’s Return to the South, 25 February 2019, url, p. 10 civilians who meet the conditions, the reconciliation process starts immediately. They are given 30 days to clarify their status, before being sent back to the same unit or to a new unit to continue their service.

2.7.1 Forms of military service

Under Syrian law, it is not possible to serve a period of military service in other places than in the regular armed forces, the Syrian Arab Army (SAA). However, a number of militias have emerged whose ties to the SAA and the GoS are so close that, in practice, it is possible to join one of the militias rather than to serve in the ordinary manner.

2.7.1.1 Pro-government militias consisting of former rebels

In several places, armed rebel groups have switched sides in the conflict as part of a reconciliation agreement. The most well-known examples are in Daraa province, where many local rebel groups have been incorporated into the 5th Corps of the SAA (see section 3.2). The 5th Corps is a special army branch that Russian forces actively helped to establish and that recruits from other parts of the population than the regular SAA branches. It consists of individuals who have already completed their military service, civil servants, former militia members and, notably, former rebels.

---

98 Hassan, M., How Russia and the regime manipulate the reconciliation process in Deir Ez-Zor Governorate, Chatham House, February 2019, url
99 For more information about pro-regime militias, see: Norway, Landinfo, Syria: Regimelojale militser (Militias loyal to the regime), 2 November 2017, url, p. 15
100 Al Jabassini, A., From insurgents to soldiers: The fifth assault corps in Daraa, southern Syria, 2019, url, pp. 5, 8
3. After the reconciliation agreement

The aim of the reconciliation agreements for GoS and the Russian forces is to have the areas concerned reincorporated into the state\(^{101}\), which will also entail the re-establishment of public services such as power supply and other services. The population in the areas expects the security situation to improve, and thereby to be ensured access to food and other vital supplies.\(^{102}\) Men of conscript age in the area must undergo military service, one way or another.\(^{103}\)

This part of the report looks more closely at the situation after the signing of reconciliation agreements. How GoS treats these areas varies considerably, and each respective area is therefore discussed separately. Not all cities are included, but rather a selection that serves to illustrate the different developments.

3.1 Damascus and Ghouta/Rural Damascus

This is a large area, in which the last parts of Eastern Ghouta were captured by the SAA in spring 2018.\(^{104}\) By then, cities in Western Ghouta, such as Darayya and Muadamiyat, had already signed reconciliation agreements, but with widely varying outcomes.\(^{105}\)

3.1.1 Darayya

SAA took over this city in Western Ghouta in 2016, after a prolonged siege. When the conflict in Syria broke out, the city, which is situated seven kilometres from the centre of Damascus, had a population of 80–250,000\(^{106}\), which had been reduced to between 2,500 to 4,000 people by August 2016.\(^{107}\) During the siege, many of the city’s inhabitants fled to the neighbouring city of Muadamiyat\(^{108}\), or to parts of Damascus and the surroundings under GoS’ control.\(^{109}\) Locals were in practice forced to sign an agreement with GoS, given GoS’s military superiority and a population that was completely exhausted after years under siege. In the agreement between local rebels and GoS, the inhabitants were given two options. They could either go to Idlib or be evacuated to a reception centre outside Damascus, in an area controlled by GoS. The majority of the remaining population chose to go to Idlib, while the rest were evacuated to the reception centre in al-Horjila.\(^{110}\)

This means that Darayya is one of the places that were emptied of people; even those who left the area before the sieges began have not been allowed to return. People with military contacts were allowed to go to the area to check on their properties, but reportedly found their homes empty.\(^{111}\)

Other sources also reported pillaging after the evacuation.\(^{112}\)

---

104 Telegraph (The), Syrian flag flying over one-time rebel stronghold Douma as Russians announce victory in Eastern Ghouta, 12 April 2018, url
105 Al, ‘We Leave or We Die’: Forced Displacement under Syria’s ‘Reconciliation’ Agreements, url, p. 30; Reuters, Former Syrian rebels flee, hide from army conscription, 10 August 2017, url
106 Al, ‘We Leave or We Die’: Forced Displacement under Syria’s ‘Reconciliation’ Agreements, 2017, url, p. 18
107 Al, ‘We Leave or We Die’: Forced Displacement under Syria’s ‘Reconciliation’ Agreements, 2017, url, p. 8
108 Al, ‘We Leave or We Die’: Forced Displacement under Syria’s ‘Reconciliation’ Agreements, 2017, url, p. 20
109 Guardian (The), Iran repopulate Syria with Shia Muslims to help tighten regime’s control, 14 January 2017, url
110 Al, ‘We Leave or We Die’: Forced Displacement under Syria’s ‘Reconciliation’ Agreements, 2017, url, p. 31
111 Al, ‘We Leave or We Die’: Forced Displacement under Syria’s ‘Reconciliation’ Agreements, 2017, url, p. 32
112 Al Modon, Fourth division, Shiite militias accused of looting Daraya, 9 September 2016, url
3.1.1.2 Consequences for the population

In 2017, sources reported that Iraqi Shia families were repopulating the area\textsuperscript{113}, probably militia members and their families\textsuperscript{114}, as the move was overseen by the Hizbullah al-Nujaba-militia.\textsuperscript{115} The displacement of the original, mainly Sunni population by Shia militia members and their families is a very sensitive issue that no GoS representatives will confirm is taking place.\textsuperscript{116} The Guardian also claimed that the offices of the city’s property register were burned down, making it difficult for many of the original inhabitants to reclaim their properties.\textsuperscript{117}

Citing the official Syrian Arab News Agency (SANA), Reuters reported in summer 2018 that the population had been allowed to return to Darayya, but could not confirm how many this concerned or who they were.\textsuperscript{118} As of March 2019, the area was still characterised by extensive destruction.\textsuperscript{119}

Sources quoted by Human Rights Watch claimed, however, that only individuals who had registered with the authorities in advance were allowed to return. They were given the chance to enter Darayya through a specific checkpoint, and for one day only, to check on their properties.\textsuperscript{120} Human Rights Watch also reported that GoS unlawfully demolished houses of residents ‘without providing notice, alternative housing, or compensation’.\textsuperscript{121}

In December 2018, SANA reported that several hundred families had returned to Darayya over a few days, according to the city’s mayor Marwan Obayd, who said that the water supply for the area would soon be restored, and that generators had been brought in to secure the power supply. He also said that four schools with a capacity of 4 000 pupils were up and running, and that there were plans to rehabilitate or build ten more schools.\textsuperscript{122}

Landinfo is unable to confirm which parts of Darayya this concerned, since several other sources reported that the city would be rebuilt in accordance with Decree 66/2012.\textsuperscript{123} The purpose of the decree was ‘to redevelop areas of unauthorised housing and informal settlements [slum]’ (Mudiriyyat tanfidh al-marsum 66, 2012)\textsuperscript{124}, while critics claimed that it was an instrument aimed at forcing the original population to relocate.\textsuperscript{125}

3.1.2 Muadamiyat al-Sham

This is the neighbouring city to Darayya, where a reconciliation agreement was signed in October 2016, resulting in 420 armed rebels and their families being evacuated to Idlib. In addition, 200 rebels from Darayya, al-Mazza and Kafr Sousa and their families, who had previously fled to Muadamiyat, were evacuated. At the time that the agreement entered into force, the city had been under siege for ten months, and the humanitarian situation was desperate.126

Unlike in Darayya, Muadamiyat was not emptied of its population, and, according to figures provided by the chair of the reconciliation committee, more than 2 500 rebel soldiers and draft evaders remained in the city to ‘have their situation clarified’.127

3.1.2.1 Consequences for the population

After the reconciliation agreement, responsibility for the city reportedly rested with the 4th Armoured Division under the command of Maher al-Assad. In July 2019, responsibility was taken over by the military intelligence branch led by Kafah Malham. The city’s reconciliation committee was said to have been informed of this at a meeting with Ali Mamlouk128, one of the most powerful men in Syria and head of the National Security Bureau; he was promoted to vice-President a couple of weeks after this meeting.129

IDP integration to places of return has not been easy and there has been ‘no massive return’ to areas of origin that have been retaken by GoS; however, a source described Muadamiyat and the neighbouring city of Qudsaya as exceptions, because the population has returned to a far greater extent there. Many of the inhabitants of these areas returned, likely due to cheaper rents in adjacent cities than in Damascus city.130

According to pro-opposition sources reporting in June-July 2019, the Syrian government continued to arrest persons perceived to be involved in activities against the government131 and security clearances were imposed on residents and IDPs that travelled to or out of the city.132

3.1.3 Qudsaya

Al-Hamah and the neighbouring town of Qudsaya signed an agreement with GoS in October 2016, after which around 2 500 people from both towns were evacuated to Idlib, including both rebel soldiers and their families. Persons who had ‘only’ evaded military service but not joined an armed group were not allowed to leave the area.133 After the evacuation, more than 200 000 people reportedly remained in the town.134

Prior to the signing of the reconciliation agreement, the local population had held several demonstrations in which they rejected the violence from both the GoS and opposition sides. People encouraged the rebels to sign an agreement to spare the town from more warfare.135

---

126 Siege Watch, Second quarterly report on besieged areas in Syria, May 2016, url, p. 27
127 Al Hurra, Ilja’ 620 musallahan min Mu’addamiyyat al-Sham qurba Dimashq (620 armed evacuated from Mu’addamiyyat al-Sham near Damascus), 19 October 2016, url
128 Nida Suriya, Tatawwurat kabira fi Mu’addamiyyat al-Sham...’Rusia tantazu’ha min Iran wa ‘Ali Mamluk yajtama’u bi-mumathlii al-madina (Major developments in Muadamiyyat al-Sham...Russia takes over from Iran and Ali Mamlouk meets representatives from the city), 2 July 2019, url
129 Khalifeh, P., Syria war: Why did Assad restructure the military-security apparatus?, Middle East Eye, 17 July 2019, url
130 Adleh, F. and Favier, A., “Local reconciliation agreements” in Syria: A non-starter for peacebuilding, European University Institute, June 2017, url, p. 10
131 Syrian Observer (The), Assad’s Security Advisor Demands Local Committees Forget ‘Detainees Issue’, 4 July 2019, url
132 SOHR, The regime forces clamp down even more on Muadamiyat al-Sham west of the capital Damascus through forcing residents and displaced people to obtain security approvals, 22 June 2019, url
133 Syria Direct, After relentless bombardment, two northwest Damascus towns give up and the evacuations begin, 13 October 2016, url
134 Syria Direct, Rebels leave, but roads still closed as regime governor calls Qudsaya agreement a ‘pardon, not a reconciliation’, 18 October 2016, url
135 Al Monitor, Militants from Syria’s Qudsaya prepare to leave for Idlib, 14 October 2016, url
It is worth noting that the governor of Rural Damascus, Ala Ibrahim, stated that the agreement entered into in Qudsaya and al-Hamah was not a reconciliation agreement, but an agreement on forgiveness/amnesty (musamah).

3.1.3.1 Consequences for the population

Shortly after the reconciliation agreement was signed, the area was opened up and food supplies allowed back in, but the checkpoints into and out of the area were still heavily manned. Qudsaya was reportedly under the control of the 101st Brigade of the Republican Guard since the beginning of the agreement, and in October 2018, the Syrian Observatory of Human Rights (SOHR) reported that it was in the process of disbanding militias affiliated to the National Defence Forces (NDF) in the area. In April 2019, however, the same source reported that the NDF, whose members are from Qudsaya, was still present in the city and carried out patrols and manned checkpoints together with the Republican Guard.

In the same way as other places, draft evaders here have to complete military service. In connection with the reconciliation process, in which members of armed rebel groups who chose to stay had to clarify their status with GoS, they were reportedly given a promise that they would not be sent to the front lines, but be allowed to serve their military service nearby. In October 2018, SOHR reported that the leadership of the 101st Brigade was carrying out a campaign in Qudsaya to locate people wanted for evasion of both initial military service and service in the reserve force. In July 2019, the same source reported that in June the security service had arrested two former commanders of the rebel faction Shuhada al-Asimah Brigade, who had both signed reconciliation agreements and joined the Republican Guard. They accused the men of killing informants and members of the GoS during the time when the armed faction had been in control of parts of the area.

3.1.4 Madaya/Zabadani

These two neighbouring towns are situated on the outskirts of Rural Damascus governorate, not far from the Lebanese border. Developments in the two towns are closely related, and they were part of what was known as the Four Towns Agreement together with Fuah and Kafriya. The two latter towns are in Idlib province, and the population is predominantly Shia. Both were controlled by GoS and besieged by rebels and HTS.

136 SANA, Muhafidh Rif Dimashq yatalla’u ala waqi’ al-khidamat fi Qudsaya ba’da ikhlaiha min al-silah wal-musallahin wa’awdat al-hayat al-tabi’iya ilayha (Governor of Rif Dimashq inspects services in Qudsaya after the city has been emptied of weapons and armed persons, and has returned to normal daily life), 17 October 2016, [url]
137 Syria Direct, After relentless bombardment, two northwest Damascus towns give up and the evacuations begin, 13 October 2016, [url]
138 CBS News, ‘Reconciliations’ provide relief from fighting in towns near Damascus, 21 November 2016, [url]
139 The NDF (National Defence Forces, Arabic: Quwat al-difa’ al-watani) is made up of a number of pro-government militias that have fought together with the SAA. They have often been referred to, somewhat imprecisely, as shabiha – ghosts. See Norway, Landinfo, Syria: Regimeljale milisete (Militias loyal to the regime), 2 November 2017, p. 8
140 SOHR, Regime’s intelligence raid Damascus suburbs and the republican Guard pulls the ‘reconciliation’ fighters towards their barracks, 12 October 2018, [url]
141 SOHR, Tajfir yastahdif dhabat min al-mukhabarat al-siyyasiya fi quwat al-nidham fi dahiyat Qudsaya wa-yatasabbab bi-maqtalihal (An explosion targeting an officer from the political intelligence of the Syrian regime in the outskirts of Qudsaya caused his death), 16 April 2019, [url]
142 NO-Landinfo drafter assessment
143 SOHR, Regime’s intelligence raid Damascus suburbs and the republican Guard pulls the ‘reconciliation’ fighters towards their barracks, 12 October 2018, [url]
144 SOHR, The regime’s security services arrests commanders and fighters of those who stuck “reconciliation and settlement” deals in the south of Damascus, 23 July 2019, [url]
145 AI, ‘We Leave or We Die’: Forced Displacement under Syria’s ‘Reconciliation’ Agreements, 2017, [url], p. 60
146 UNOCHA, Turkey/Syria: Four towns evacuation (as of 20April 2017), 20 April 2017, [url], pp. 1-3
Sources reported in 2015 that the people of Zabadani were forced to flee to Madaya, some of whom were also reportedly from Bludan, a nearby town. There were also reports of negotiations on a reconciliation agreement in the same year, but this was allegedly blocked by Hezbollah with support from Iran. The aim was to be in full control of the town, which is in a strategic location\(^{147}\) and has been important to the group since long before the uprising started in 2011.\(^{148}\) The year before, the local reconciliation committee had to mediate between two pro-GoS groups when conflict broke out in connection with the attempt to reach an agreement.\(^{149}\)

When the agreement was finally signed in 2017, a source claimed it had been brokered by Qatar and Iran, without the involvement of Russians or GoS.\(^{150}\) Another source claims that it was signed by jihadist group Ahrar al-Sham and HTS, on the one hand, and Hezbollah, Iran and GoS, on the other.\(^{151}\) It stipulated that the population of Fuah and Kafriya had to leave their homes, while the population of Madaya was given the choice of leaving the town or being reconciled with GoS.\(^{152}\) The agreement seemed to be in jeopardy when on 15 April 2017 a bomb killed more than one hundred bus passengers on their way from Fuah and Kafriya to Aleppo, but the evacuation was completed.\(^{153}\) The majority of the population of Madaya chose to stay and reconcile with GoS; while just over 2 000 people were reportedly bussed to Idlib, and around 40 000 stayed.\(^{154}\) According to the same source, the plan was to empty Zabadani of its population.

The agreement included the release of several hundred prisoners on both sides. Prisoner exchanges are not unusual in reconciliation agreements, although these also take place outside the framework of such agreements.\(^{155}\) The high number of prisoners exchanged in this example was notable: 1 500 prisoners were released and sent to Idlib in July 2018\(^{156}\), while 750 prisoners had been sent to the same place in December 2017.\(^{157}\)

3.1.4.1 Consequences for the population

Antagonists of GoS both expected and feared that the Four Towns Agreement would be the first step in the direction of population resettlement, where rebel-held areas with a Sunni majority population would be completely evacuated and repopulated by other groups loyal to the government. In this case, the assumption was that the areas would be repopulated by Shias, including from the two towns in Idlib and elsewhere.\(^{158}\) Iran reportedly pushed for such a population resettlement at one point.\(^{159}\)

The two towns in Idlib, Fuah and Kafriya, were emptied in summer 2018 when the last of the inhabitants left. They were initially taken to Aleppo, but Landinfo has found no evidence that the population of the two towns have been relocated in Zabadani or Madaya.\(^{160}\) A source claimed that a

\(^{147}\) Al Monitor, Syrian regime displaces Zabadani residents, 15 September 2015, [url]

\(^{148}\) Alami, M., Hezbollah’s military involvement in Syria and its wider regional role, March 2017, [url], p. 19; Tokmajyan, A., Hezbollah’s military intervention in Syria, December 2014, [url], p. 110

\(^{149}\) Adleh, F. and Favier, A., “Local reconciliation agreements” in Syria: A non-starter for peacebuilding, European University Institute, June 2017, [url], p. 7

\(^{150}\) Beals, E., Syria’s cruel ‘reconciliations’, The Daily Beast, 9 December 2017, [url]

\(^{151}\) Arfeh, H., The institutionalization of demographic change in Syria, Atlantic Council, 4 April 2019, [url]

\(^{152}\) France 24, Thousands of Syrian evacuated under Qatar – Iran deal, 14 April 2017, [url]

\(^{153}\) BBC, Syria war: ‘At least 68 children among 126 killed’ in bus bombing, 17 April 2017, [url]

\(^{154}\) France 24, Thousands of Syrian evacuated under Qatar – Iran deal, 14 April 2017, [url]

\(^{155}\) SOHR, Sednaya prison continues to claim the lives of Syrians by killing 2 citizens under torture after being arrested by regime’s intelligence previously, 18 August 2019, [url]

\(^{156}\) Al Monitor, Prisoners exchanged for evacuees from pro-regime towns in Syrian north, 25 July 2018, [url]

\(^{157}\) Beals, E., Syria’s cruel ‘reconciliations’. 9 December 2017, [url]

\(^{158}\) Guardian (The), Iran repopulate Syria with Shia Muslims to help tighten regime’s control, 14 January 2017, [url]

\(^{160}\) NO-Landinfo drafter assessment
large part of the population then lived in Hisya and al-Basit in the Homs district, the Aleppo area, including the two Shia towns of Nubl and Zahra, as well as in Damascus.

In November 2018, the leader of the local council in Zabadani stated that 4,500 families had returned to the town, and that 600 homes had been rehabilitated. He also stated that major rehabilitation work was under way on all parts of the town’s infrastructure. From an unofficial Facebook page dedicated to the town, such as Mahalliyyat fi al-Zabadani (‘local [events] in al-Zabadani’)163, it is evident that some of the town’s inhabitants were still in Lebanon. A Facebook post, dated 29 July 2019, described the poor conditions for Syrians in Lebanon, and claims that more and more of the town’s population are returning home. It also claimed that many young men (shabab) who are supposed to have served in the military or the reserve force are returning. They were granted authorisation (takili) at the border and told to contact the enlistment office in Zabadani within 15 days to complete their compulsory military or reserve service. Other posts from October 2019 posted by the same Facebook account indicated more returns from Lebanon to Zabadani. Landinfo has been unable to verify this information.

It is also evident that the repairs to the town’s water pipes are far from completed. A post from late May 2019 refers to widespread dissatisfaction with the water supply.

According to residents and refugees from Zabadani interviewed by the European Institute of Peace (EIP) during autumn 2018 and February 2019, the majority of returns to Zabadani were reportedly of persons from the Damascus area or from nearby Bludan town, who were supportive of the GoS and have left the town before it fell to the armed opposition in 2012. Local sources noted that these returnees weren’t subjected to the reconciliation process. Refugees interviewed by EIP claimed that around 350 persons had returned from Lebanon to Zabadani, during July-September 2018. Refugees from Zabadani interviewed by EIP claimed that there been cases of GoS arresting individuals who undertook reconciliations required for returning to the town, most of them being subsequently released, while others remained missing. Arrests of those who made contact with relatives in Idlib were also reported.

The situation in Madaya is different, given that a substantial proportion of the population did not leave the city. The European Council on Foreign Relations (ECFR) noted in a May 2019 report that ‘Madaya is full of residents, while activity in its commercial district is picking up again’. Several local community Facebook pages give the impression that people go about their daily lives and show a lot more people on the streets and cars on the roads than corresponding pages for Zabadani. SOHR reported in October 2018 that the Syrian intelligence services reportedly arrested over 40 civilians in Madaya for unknown reasons.

161 Al Tamimi, A., Exile from Kafariya: Interview, 10 September 2018, [url]
162 SANA, Al-Zabadani municipality: 4,500 families returned to city, maintenance work continues, 11 November 2018, [url]
163 Mahalliyyat fi al-Zabadani (Local news in Zabadani) [Facebook], [url]
164 Mahalliyyat fi al-Zabadani, [Facebook], posted on: 29 July 2019, [url]
165 Mahalliyyat fi al-Zabadani, [Facebook], posted on: 10 October 2019, [url], Mahalliyyat fi al-Zabadani, [Facebook], posted on: 4 October 2019, [url]
166 NO-Landinfo drifter assessment
167 Mahalliyyat fi al-Zabadani, [Facebook], posted on: 29 May 2019, [url]
171 Majlis baladiyyat Madaya (The municipal council of Madaya), [Facebook], posted on: n.d. [url], Madaya, [Facebook], posted on: n.d., [url]
172 SOHR, In the Eastern Ghouta, regime’s intelligence arrest 45 people and informs about 100 others that they must check with their security branches in Damascus, 17 October 2018, [url]
3.1.5 Douma

Douma is the biggest city in Eastern Ghouta, and it had been besieged for several years before an agreement was negotiated in April 2018. Negotiations had been ongoing since the month before, but the Jaysh al-Islam rebel group, which controlled Douma, broke the negotiations on 6 April. The day after, a chemical attack was carried out allegedly with chlorine gas, according to some sources. Other sources cited by the Independent said that no such attack took place, but negotiations on an agreement were almost immediately resumed, and a spokesperson from Jaysh al-Islam stated that it was due to the presumed gas attack.

According to Russian forces, which contributed actively to negotiating the deal, a total of 21 145 rebel soldiers and their families left the city. The last of them left Douma on 13 April 2018.

In the period leading up to this, Douma and the other cities in Eastern Ghouta had been under intensive bombardment from the SAA and Russian forces. In March 2018, humanitarian corridors were opened for the population of some of the towns. The corridors, which were initiated by Russian forces, led to reception centres where the inhabitants who fled were registered and given food and water. Before being allowed into the centres, they had to undergo a quick screening, due to fears that IS members were hiding among the civilians. They were later screened by representatives of Syrian authorities present in these centres, and those who sought refuge there were not allowed to leave the centres before being granted permission by the authorities. An international organisation informed Landinfo that eleven such centres were established to receive refugees from Eastern Ghouta, not just from Douma. Several of them were run by the Syrian Arab Red Crescent (SARC).

The centres quickly became very crowded, as people were waiting to be screened, which was confirmed in Landinfo’s meetings with various actors in Damascus in March 2018. A representative of an international organisation described the situation in one of the centres as ‘apocalyptic’. Mothers with children under the age of 15 were prioritised in the screening, and were allowed to leave the centres if they found a sponsor who could guarantee for them. It was reported in April 2018 that 166 644 people fled from Douma via the humanitarian corridors.

3.1.5.1 Consequences for the population

The level of destruction in Douma and the rest of Eastern Ghouta is enormous, which Landinfo also observed during a visit in April 2019. Despite this, an international organisation that Landinfo met estimated that around 300 000 people are living in the city districts and cities in Eastern Ghouta, including Douma. The same organisation confirmed that access to the areas was much better now than before, but that people still have to apply for permission every time they want to visit the area. This was confirmed by another international organisation, which stated that around half of its... requests for access to Eastern Ghouta were granted by GoS. The same organisation pointed out that it is more difficult to fund aid for the area than it was before GoS took control.\textsuperscript{185}

GoS has reopened schools in different places in the area\textsuperscript{186}, but Landinfo has been unable to confirm whether all children in the area are offered schooling.

There are major challenges associated with civil registration in both Douma and the rest of Eastern Ghouta, after the area has been controlled by rebel groups for several years. Legal experts from SARC were present at the reception centres to start the process of issuing identity papers recognised by GoS.\textsuperscript{187} Papers issued by local councils in the area are seen as an indication that an event has taken place, but it is still necessary to go through the courts to register births, marriages, divorces, deaths etc.\textsuperscript{188}

Up until the end of April 2019, the inhabitants who remained in Douma and people from the outside who wanted to visit the area needed security clearance to pass the checkpoints on the outskirts of the city. People living in Douma had to apply to the officer responsible for the city to leave the area, and state their reason for leaving. According to the opposition website Enab Baladi, these regulations were lifted on 26 April 2019, and the information was published on the local council’s website. The regulations were lifted due to efforts of the governor of Rural Damascus province\textsuperscript{189}, Ala Munir Ibrahim, and Muhammad Khayr Saryul, a member of parliament from Douma.\textsuperscript{190}

The Independent International Commission of Inquiry on the Syrian Arab Republic (Col) noted in a report covering the period January to July 2019 that in Douma the majority of residents were required to obtain permission to travel to Damascus. According to interviewees by Col, GoS checkpoints were present throughout the city and soldiers manning the checkpoints reportedly had access to a computerized system to track movements of civilians. Residents also alleged that the GoS forces were monitoring their phones.\textsuperscript{191} According to other sources, as of July 2019 inhabitants who wished to leave Douma still needed to apply for a permit.\textsuperscript{192}

The Col noted in the report that government forces conducted a campaign of arbitrary arrests upon securing control of Douma.\textsuperscript{193}

One source reported campaigns of arrests mainly targeting people who are to undergo military service.\textsuperscript{194} Landinfo assumes that the arrests concern people who have failed to report for service at the stated time.\textsuperscript{195} The same source reported that persons who worked with the local council during the blockade, persons affiliated to Syria Civil Defence (the White Helmets) and persons who have been

\textsuperscript{185} NO-Landinfo interview with International organisation b, Damascus, April 2019
\textsuperscript{186} NO-Landinfo interview with International organisation c, Damascus, April 2019
\textsuperscript{187} NO-Landinfo interview with Syrian Arab Red Crescent (SARC), Damascus, April 2019
\textsuperscript{188} For more information about civil registration, see Norway, Landinfo, Syria: Identitetsdokumenter og pass (ID documents and passports), July 2017, \url{url}, pp. 18-20
\textsuperscript{189} Enab Baladi, Ba’da am... quwat al-Asad tasmahu bi-harakat ahali Duma duna muwafaqa amniya (After a year ... Asads forces allows local population from Duma freedom of movement without security clearance), 26 May 2019, \url{url}
\textsuperscript{190} Majlis al-sha’b (People’s Assembly), Adu majlis al-sha’b: Muhammad Khayr Saryul bin Subhi walisdatuhi Fatima (Member of People’s Assembly: Muhammad Khayr Saryul son of Subhi his mother is Fatima), n.d., \url{url}
\textsuperscript{192} Enab Baladi, Ba’da am... quwat al-Asad tasmahu bi-harakat ahali Duma duna muwafaqa amniya (After a year ... Asads forces allows local population from Duma freedom of movement without security clearance), 26 May 2019, \url{url}
\textsuperscript{194} Teleвизион Suriya, Ba’da ‘am min saytarat nidham al-Asad ‘ala Duma... ma zala al-hisar mustamirra (One year after the Asad regime took control over Douma...siege continues), 12 April 2019, \url{url}
\textsuperscript{195} NO-Landinfo dratter assessment
affiliated to an armed rebel group are also being arrested. Persons who have signed reconciliation agreements with GoS were also reported to have been arrested.196

Sources also reported problems with the water and power supply.197 The CoI stated that in residential areas of Douma, the GoS did not supply electricity and the water was not potable.198

Another source provided a description of the markets in Douma during Ramadan, which stated that, although there were goods available, including meat and vegetables, the prices were so high that people could not afford to shop, and the markets were therefore quiet.199

3.1.6 Yalda, Babila and Bayt Sahm

These villages, which are now regarded as districts of Damascus, are located on a belt east of the Yarmouk area and Hajar al-Aswad (see section 3.1.8). They belong to Rural Damascus governorate, however, even though they are just a few kilometres from the centre of Damascus.200

The villages entered into agreements with GoS almost simultaneously in spring 2018, after GoS had launched a major offensive against rebel-held areas in Eastern Ghouta.201 Russian forces reportedly played an active role in brokering the agreements.202 This was not the first time rebels in the three villages had signed agreements with GoS. Already in spring 2014, the parties had agreed on a ceasefire in the three villages203, but supplies to the towns went through channels loyal to GoS, and there were concerns that the aid was only received by those loyal to GoS or was lost in corruption.204

An important factor in these villages was the role that local Muslim clerics played in the negotiations with GoS.205 Already in 2014, three clerics negotiated the ceasefire agreement, and managed to include emergency aid deliveries, the release of prisoners, and the transfer of sick people and residents’ access to official documents. All three had been affiliated to opposition groups in the three villages, and were partly active in the administration of the areas during the period outside GoS control.206

196 Televiziyon Suriya, Ba’da ‘am min saytarat nidham al-Asad ‘ala Duma... ma zala al-hisar mustamirra (One year after the Asad regime took control over Douma...siege continues), 12 April 2019, url
197 Nida Suriya, Mu’ana kabira ya’ishuha ahali Duma bi-Rif Dimashq bi-sabab ihmal nidham al-Asad...irmil al-miyah bi-1000 lira suriyyiy (Population in Douma in Rif Damackus lives with major suffering due to the neglect of Asad regime... a bucket of water costs 1000 syrian pound), 30 July 2019, url; Televiziyon Suriya, Ba’da ‘am min saytarat nidham al-Asad ‘ala Duma... ma zala al-hisar mustamirra (One year after the Asad regime took control over Douma...siege continues), 12 April 2019, url
199 Hassan, L., Fi dhull saytarat al-nidham... aswaq Duma mahjura fi ramadan (In the shadow of the Regime’s control ... markets in Douma are deserted during Ramadan), 5 May 2019, url
200 Marefa, Muhafadhat Rif Dimashq (The Governorate of Rif Dimashq), n.d., url
201 Xinhua, Deal reaches for evacuation of rebels from 3 towns south of Syria’s Damascus, 29 April 2018, url
202 Zaman Al Wasl, Damascus: Military Security arrests former rebel commanders who agreed to reconciliation deal, 24 July 2019, url
203 Al Saidawi, H., How Syria’s regime used local clerics to reassert its authority in Rural Damascus governorate, Carnegie Middle East Center, 27 March 2019, url
205 Ezzi, M., How the Syrian regime is using the mask of ‘reconciliation’ to destroy opposition institutions, Chatham House, June 2017, url
206 Al Saidawi, H., How Syria’s regime used local clerics to reassert its authority in Rural Damascus governorate, Carnegie Middle East Center, 27 March 2019, url
3.1.6.1 Consequences for the population

After a deal had been negotiated in spring 2018, around 8,400 people left the three villages in early May, according to SOHR.\(^{207}\) Another source said that about three hundred civilians left, while the rest were rebel soldiers and their families, who did not want to sign reconciliation agreements with GoS.\(^{208}\)

In the negotiations, the clerics passed on guarantees from the GoS, including promises to not punish local residents and that those who had evaded military service would be granted a grace period before having to report for service.\(^{209}\)

After GoS regained control of the three villages, the clerics’ mosques were re-affiliated to the Ministry of Religious Endowments (\(waqf/awqaf\)) and they regained their former positions in the towns. The clerics continued to act as middlemen between the GoS and the local communities.\(^{210}\)

In summer 2019, reports were received that the Palestine Branch of the military intelligence service had arrested three former rebel commanders who had signed reconciliation agreements with GoS.\(^{211}\) Other unarmed members of the opposition and their family members had reportedly also been arrested, even though they had all signed reconciliation agreements.\(^{212}\)

3.1.7 Qadam

Qadam is not part of Eastern Ghouta, but belongs to the city of Damascus. The district is situated a few kilometres from both Darayya and the centre of Damascus, bordering on the city districts of Yarmouk and Hajar al-Aswad.\(^{213}\) Qadam is a special case, where an agreement between rebel groups and GoS was signed already in 2014, stipulating that the rebels would only stay in the western part of the area. This was before the Russian military intervention in Syria and before the reconciliation agreements, so the 2014 agreement did not entail disarmament of the rebels, nor the possibility of them clarifying their situation (\(taswiyat al-wada\); see section 2.5).\(^{214}\)

Islamist and jihadist groups enjoyed a strong position in this area, and in 2015, IS took control of parts of Qadam, while other parts were controlled by HTS (al-Qaeda) and Ajnad al-Sham.\(^{215}\) In 2016, a new agreement was signed, and some members of militant groups were evacuated to Idlib province, while others remained and joined pro-GoS forces.\(^{216}\)

After agreement was reached between GoS, on the one hand, and HTS and others, on the other, about 1,300 jihadists and their families were evacuated to Idlib in March 2018.\(^{217}\) When GoS forces in March 2018 attempted to take over the parts of Qadam vacated by HTS, they were attacked by IS\(^{218}\), which

---

\(^{207}\) Straits Times (The), Syria rebels exit towns near Damascus, leaving only ISIS, 11 May 2018, url
\(^{208}\) Al Saidawi, H., How Syria’s regime used local clerics to reassert its authority in Rural Damascus governorate, Carnegie Middle East Center, 27 March 2019, url
\(^{209}\) Al Saidawi, H., How Syria’s regime used local clerics to reassert its authority in Rural Damascus governorate, Carnegie Middle East Center, 27 March 2019, url
\(^{210}\) Al Saidawi, H., How Syria’s regime used local clerics to reassert its authority in Rural Damascus governorate, Carnegie Middle East Center, 27 March 2019, url
\(^{211}\) Al Monitor, The peculiar case of Syria’s al-Qadam neighbourhood, 2 September 2015, url; NO-Landinfo drafter assessment
\(^{212}\) Al Monitor, The peculiar case of Syria’s al-Qadam neighbourhood, 2 September 2015, url
\(^{213}\) Al Monitor, The peculiar case of Syria’s al-Qadam neighbourhood, 2 September 2015, url
\(^{214}\) AFP, Syria rebels leave al-Qadam south of Damascus, Zaman Al Wasl, 13 March 2018, url
\(^{215}\) AFP, Syria rebels leave al-Qadam south of Damascus, Zaman Al Wasl, 13 March 2018, url
\(^{216}\) Syrian Observer (The), ISIS takes place of HTS in al-Qadam south of Damascus, 29 March 2018, url managed to hold the area for some time. In April 2018, GoS regained control of Qadam, and as of October 2019 remained in control of the district.

3.1.7.1 Consequences for the population

Qadam saw extensive destruction, notably after the clashes with IS in 2018. Parts of the population who had fled the area early in the conflict returned in 2016, but fled again when the agreement between GoS and the rebels broke down, or when a deal between the rebels and GoS concluded in 2017 was implemented in the spring of 2018.

Some areas in Qadam were reportedly zoned for reconstruction under Decree 66/2012, issued by Bashar al-Assad, under the name Basilia City. Critics of GoS see the decree and Law 10/2018 as punishment against areas where the civil uprising in 2011 quickly gained strong support. The law provides for the possibility of expropriating land and establishing public-private companies to develop the areas. The critics also pointed out that these private-public projects would benefit Russian investors, on the one hand, while in other places, there were fears of large-scale acquisitions by Iran.

For its part, GoS claimed that it was an expedient way of rebuilding the country, while also addressing the problem of houses built in areas not zoned for housing.

3.1.8 Yarmouk and Hajar al-Aswad

These are also districts of Damascus, and before the conflict broke out, Yarmouk was home to one of the largest Palestinian refugee camps in Syria, housing almost 160,000 United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (UNRWA)-registered Palestinian refugees. A large number of Syrians also lived in the area, which had the status of an ‘unofficial’ refugee camp, which means that, in practice, GoS was responsible for the infrastructure there to a far greater extent than in official camps.

Yarmouk camp was the scene of major protests already in 2011, and in June that year, the headquarters of one of the pro-GoS Palestinian factions (PFLP-GC) in the camp was burned to the ground by furious protesters. Fierce fighting erupted in December 2012, causing around 140,000 Palestinians and thousands of Syrians to flee the area. In summer 2013, Yarmouk was besieged by GoS and UNRWA was unable to access the camp until six months later.

In 2015, IS and other Islamist-jihadi groups took control of large parts of the camp, which again caused thousands to flee to the neighbouring districts of Babila, Bayt Sahm, Yalda and Tadamon, with the result that UNRWA was only able to provide limited medical services in these districts.

---

219 Siege Watch, Tenth quarterly report, part 2 – The culmination of ‘Surrender or die’, June 2018, url
220 Liveuamap, Syria, 1 October 2019, url
221 Xinhua, Destruction seen in captured areas in S Damascus, 30 April 2018, url
222 AP, Amid truce, Syrians return to gutted Damascus ghost towns, Islamic State ranks exit Palestinian ghetto, Japan Times (The), 16 January 2016, url
223 AFP, Syria rebels leave al-Qadam south of Damascus, Zaman Al Wasi, 13 March 2018, url
224 Asharq al-Aswat, Rusiya tunafisu Iran ‘ala i’mar Suriya wa-tajmudu “al-dahiya al-janubiyya” fi Dimashq (Russia competes with Iran in the rebuilding of Syria and is inflexible in the southern outskirts of Damascus), 20 September 2018, url
226 UNRWA, Yarmouk (unofficial camp), n.d., url; UN, The question of Palestine. Almost all UNRWA installations in Yarmouk and Dera’a camp in Syria severely damaged or destroyed – Press release, 1 December 2018, url; NO-Landinfo interview with UNRWA, Damascus, April 2019
227 Baitari, N., Yarmouk refugee camp and the Syrian uprising: A view from within, Autumn 2013, url
228 UNRWA, The crisis in Yarmouk camp, n.d., url
229 Hall, N., Palestinian refugees and the siege of Yarmouk, Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, 13 March 2014, url
230 UNRWA, Yarmouk (unofficial camp), n.d., url
231 Al Khalidi, S., Islamic State withdraws from Yarmouk camp, Nusra remains: residents. Reuters, 15 April 2015, url
232 UNRWA, Yarmouk (unofficial camp), n.d., url
In spring 2018, the Syrian government launched an offensive to recapture these areas after having regained control of the other areas in and around Damascus that had been outside GoS control. In early May, a new agreement was entered into, and up to five thousand people were evacuated to Jarabulus, north of Aleppo, controlled by armed groups backed by Turkey.233 Other sources quoted much higher figures and claimed that some of the evacuees were allowed to go to Daraa and not northern Syria.234 With this, the capital city and the surrounding areas were completely cleansed of armed resistance against GoS.235

3.1.8.1 Consequences for the population
Sources Landinfo met with in Damascus in spring 2019 agreed that the level of destruction in Yarmouk is extensive. UNRWA stated in a meeting with Landinfo that all the organisation’s buildings in the camp had been damaged. According to estimates, between 40 and 60% of the camp was completely destroyed.236

There were also reports of inhabitants remaining in the area, but how many is unknown. Estimates varied from 90 families to up to 4 000 people. UNRWA told Landinfo that it does not know the identity of these individuals, except for some elderly Palestinian refugees who stayed in the camp throughout the siege and conflict.237

Sources in 2019 reported that it is possible for people from Yarmouk to enter the camp to check the condition of houses or other property. To do so, they have to leave their ID card at one of the checkpoints on the way into the camp and pick it up on their way out.238 One source claimed that Palestinians who wish to leave the southern districts of Damascus need permission from the security forces.239

Around 6 000 people from Yarmouk fled to the neighbouring districts of Yalda, Bayt Sahm and Babila. UNRWA provides services here on a weekly basis, with doctors and dentists working out of mobile clinics.240

Several sources reported arrests, including of individuals who have signed reconciliation agreements with GoS.241 In addition, relatives of individuals who were evacuated to Northern Syria (Idlib) were reportedly arrested.242

The reconstruction of the camp and the surrounding areas is a source of concern for impatient residents waiting to start rebuilding their homes. There are widespread fears that all or parts of Yarmouk will not be rebuilt, and that the area will be expropriated under Law 10 and turned into more exclusive residences and commercial areas.243

---

233 OHCHR, Between a Rock and a Hard Place – Civilians in North-western Syria, June 2018, url, p. 1
234 Suriya ala tul, Muqatilu al-mu’arada yughadiruna akhir mu’aqalihim fi al-asima al-suriyya (Rebel soldiers leave last position in the Syrian capital), 5 May 2019, url
235 Reuters, Syria’s army recaptures last insurgent area near Damascus, 21 May 2018, url
236 NO-Landinfo interview with UNRWA, Damascus, April 2019; NO-Landinfo interview with Abed al-Majid, Khalid, Alliance of Palestinian Resistance Forces, Damascus, April 2019
237 NO-Landinfo interview with UNRWA, Damascus, April 2019
238 NO-Landinfo interview with UNRWA, Damascus, April 2019
239 Macharis O. and Asfar, R., Palestinian refugees of Syria’s Yarmouk camp: Challenges and obstacles to return, 17 January 2019, url; NO-Landinfo interview with UNRWA, Damascus, April 2019
240 Syria Direct, On the anniversary of the peace deal in Southern Damascus “there is no amnesty, no reconciliation”, 21 May 2019, url
241 NO-Landinfo interview with UNRWA, Damascus, April 2019
242 Syria Direct, On the anniversary of the peace deal in Southern Damascus “there is no amnesty, no reconciliation”, 21 May 2019, url; SOHR, The regime’s security services arrests commanders and fighters of those who stuck “reconciliation and settlement” deals in the south of Damascus, 23 July 2019, url
243 SOHR, The regime’s security services arrests commanders and fighters of those who stuck “reconciliation and settlement” deals in the south of Damascus, 23 July 2019, url
244 Al Shimale, Z., ‘No way back’: The law that stops displaced Syrians from ever going home, Middle East Eye, 8 April 2019, url
3.2 Daraa

Large parts of Daraa province had been outside GoS control when the government forces launched an offensive to regain control of the entire province in spring/early summer 2018. However, GoS had control of large sections of the M5 motorway, which goes from Damascus to Mafraq in Jordan via the Jabir checkpoint and parts of Daraa city had been under GoS control throughout the uprising and subsequent war. The result was that the area was split into two parts, straddling a wedge of land in the middle controlled by GoS.

Daraa stands out as an area where Russian forces have been heavily involved in many of the reconciliation agreements that have been signed, and where many former rebels have joined various pro-GoS groups as part of reconciliation agreements, notably the Syrian Army group known as the 5th Corps. Russian forces were instrumental in the establishment of this branch of the army, and continue to exert great influence on it.

In addition, many former rebels who have not formally joined other groups, but kept their light weapons. The combination of these factors created a complicated, unstable situation in the governorate, with frequent security-related events for which responsibility is uncertain.

3.2.1 Al-Sanamayn

The city of al-Sanamayn is situated along the motorway between Damascus and Amman, and was one of the first in the country to enter into a reconciliation agreement. The agreement was signed in December 2016, after parts of the city had been under siege several times. Al-Sanamayn is special because parts of the city have been under GoS control throughout the conflict, while various rebel groups have controlled other parts. Rebel groups continued their armed presence in the city after the reconciliation, but stopped attacking the government forces.

Nor was the reconciliation agreement meant to include all the inhabitants; the idea was rather that all the families and clans had representatives who carried out a ‘sorting out of affairs’ (taswiyat al-wada; see sections 2.4 and 2.5). In total, 510 people from the city underwent this process, 150 of whom were said to have been armed rebels.

3.2.1.1 Consequences for the population

After the reconciliation agreement was signed in December 2016, the sieges were lifted in the parts of the city that had been under rebel control. Most public services in Al-Sanamayn continued to be provided by the GoS throughout, such as identity papers, since only parts of the city had been held by

---

244 Maayeh, S., and Hares, N., The fall of Daraa, Foreign Affairs, 23 July 2018, url
245 Liveuamap, Syria, 1 May 2018, url
246 Makki, D., As violence flares up in Daraa, control can be an illusion, 3 July 2019, url
247 Al Jabassini, A., From rebel rule to a post-capitulation era in Daraa southern Syria: The impacts and outcomes of rebel behaviour during negotiations, 2019, url, pp. 10-11
248 Al Jabassini, A., From rebel rule to a post-capitulation era in Daraa southern Syria: The impacts and outcomes of rebel behaviour during negotiations, 2019, url, pp. 5-6
249 NO-Landinfo drafter assessment
250 AFP, Cradle of Syria’s uprising turns into ‘chaotic’ south, Al Monitor, 29 August 2019, url
251 Based on reading of UNOCHA, Dar’a governorate. Reference Map, December 2015, url
252 Syrian Observer (The), Sanamayn City under siege, 21 May 2019, url
253 Al Tamimi, A. J., Reconciliations: The case of al-Sanamayn in North-Deraa, 27 April 2017, url
254 Al Tamimi, A. J., Reconciliations: The case of al-Sanamayn in North-Deraa, 27 April 2017, url
255 SANA Syrian News Agency, Taswiyat awda’ 510 ashkhas min madinat al-Sanamayn baynahum 150 musallahan sallamu anfusahum wa-asihihatuhum lil-jihat al-mukhtassa (510 persons from the city al-Sanamayn assessed their situation, including 150 armed persons who surrendered and handed in weapons to relevant agencies), 25 December 2016, url rebels. As of May 2019, armed rebels without heavy weapons were still in control of parts of the city, and there have been clashes, though these conflicts have been resolved very quickly.

In May 2019, several sources reported that the Syrian government had besieged parts of the city after government forces had allegedly been fired on by unknown gunmen. The cause of the clashes was reportedly because a security branch belonging to the GoS had arrested a former leader of an opposition faction in the city.

Speculations diverged as regards why this conflict has escalated. Those opposed to reconciliation agreements claimed it is the GoS' strategy to gain full control of the city, while another source claimed that the security branch is trying to put an end to ordinary crime, and that it is not politically motivated. Another source reported that the events were in relation to the higher level of conflict in Daraa governorate in general, where a number of GoS security force members and individuals who have entered into reconciliation agreement have been killed.

The siege was lifted after eight days, when a delegation of local dignitaries and Russian military personnel visited the city to negotiate with the GoS.

3.2.2 Daraa city

Daraa city is where the first protests against the GoS broke out in spring 2011, and different rebel factions controlled parts of the city for many years. Daraa city and the rest of the governorate stand out from other parts of Syria in that jihadist factions such as HTS and Ahrar al-Sham have enjoyed little support. One of the reasons was the city’s proximity to Jordan, where the Military Operations Center run by US and Jordanian forces actively promoted more moderate groups at the expense of Islamist groups.

Already in 2017, Daraa was included in a plan drawn up by Russia, Turkey and Iran that established several de-escalation zones. In June 2018, however, GoS launched a major offensive on Daraa after the last areas in Damascus and Eastern Ghouta outside GoS control had been recaptured. As a result of the offensive, GoS took control of all the areas in the southern part of the country, except an area in the desert near the Jordanian border, across the border from the US Tanf base. An IS pocket between this area and al-Suwayda was captured by GoS forces in mid-November 2018.

Russia played a central part in the negotiations on the different reconciliation agreements, which formed the basis for GoS recapturing Daraa. Although Daraa had seen a lower level of conflict than the rest of the country, around 15 000 people chose to leave the province and go to Idlib. Five

---

256 Al Tamimi, A. J., Reconciliations: The case of al-Sanamayn in North-Deraa, 27 April 2017, url
257 Landinfo has not found any sources indicating that the situation has changed. NO-Landinfo drifter assessment
258 Syrian Observer (The), Sanamayn City under siege, 21 May 2019, url
259 SOHR, Public tension and discontent continue in al-Sanamayn City as the suffocating siege by regime forces on the citizens continues for the 5th consecutive day, 20 May 2019, url; Syrian Observer (The), Sanamayn City under siege, 21 May 2019, url
260 SOHR, Public tension and discontent continue in al-Sanamayn City as the suffocating siege by regime forces on the citizens continues for the 5th consecutive day, 20 May 2019, url
261 Syrian Observer (The), Sanamayn City under siege, 21 May 2019, url
262 AFP, Cradle of Syria’s uprising turns into ‘chaotic’ south, Al Monitor, 29 August 2019, url
263 SOHR, After 8 days of tight siege... the regime forces lift the siege imposed over al-Sanamayn city after meeting with dignitaries from Haoran with the Russian forces, 23 May 2019, url
264 Sayigh, Y., The Syrian regime has several military options as it advances after the Aleppo victory, Carnegie Middle East Center, 19 December 2016, url
265 Al-Koshak, O., Mapping Southern Syria’s armed opposition, 13 October 2015, url
266 Beals, E., De-Escalation and Astana, Atlantic Council, 15 September 2017, url
267 OHCHR, The “unreconciled” concerns of civilians in Dar’a Governorate, May 2019, url, p. 3
268 HRW (Human Rights Watch), Syria: Detention, harassment in retake areas, 21 May 2019, url
269 Liveuamap, Syria, 18 November 2018, url
270 FT, Assad forces retake Syrian rebel stronghold of Deraa, 12 July 2018, url thousand of them were said to have been armed rebels, while the rest were family members of anti-government activists.271

3.2.2.1 Consequences for the population

Daraa is one of the places in Syria where Russia has had the strongest influence on the reconciliation agreement, and among the places where many former rebels chose to stay, unlike in other parts of Syria.272 Notably, many subsequently joined the 5th Corps273 (see also section 2.7.1.1), although several hundred former rebels who underwent a reconciliation process also joined the 4th Armoured Division. This was reportedly a reaction to Russia dissolving the 5th Corps in the western part of the governorate.274

Many places in both the city and governorate were still under the control of former rebels, but as part of the GoS power structure through the Russian supervised 5th Corps.275 As a consequence of the reconciliation agreements, regular Syrian forces and the police were not allowed to enter areas that were controlled by armed rebel groups.276

For many years, the number of political assassinations in Daraa was reported to be far higher than in other parts of the country.277

As of October 2019, this assassination trend was continuing and appeared to have escalated,278, also since GoS regained control of the city and province in summer 2018. The reasons for the assassination trend were reportedly complex; not all of them were politically motivated but some also appear to be due to personal vengeance. Very few of these incidents resulted in penal sanctions by the state, giving the appearance for the civilian population that the city and governorate were only loosely controlled by GoS.279

Another result of the situation described above was that on several occasion armed clashes have broken out between different branches of the army and groups that were all part of GoS.280

OHCHR reported that civilians and former opposition fighters who signed reconciliation agreements with GoS and who took up positions in local administration or military forces, have been killed by unknown perpetrators in what appeared to be targeted killings.281

Several sources reported arrest campaigns, including of individuals who signed reconciliation agreements with GoS.282 Many of these campaigns were mainly focused on persons wanted for draft evasion. After signing a reconciliation agreement, draft evaders will usually be granted a grace period of six months before having to enlist (see section 2.7). One of the reasons for the arrests may be disagreement about when this grace period starts and ends, and about which terms of the

---

271 Al Jabassini, A., From rebel rule to a post-capitulation era in Daraa southern Syria: The impacts and outcomes of rebel behaviour during negotiations, 2019, [url](p. 11)
272 AFP (Agence France Presse), Cradle of Syria’s uprising turns into ‘chaotic’ south, Al Monitor, 29 August 2019, [url]
273 Al Jabassini, A., From rebel rule to a post-capitulation era in Daraa southern Syria: The impacts and outcomes of rebel behaviour during negotiations, 2019, [url], pp. 12-14
274 Al Jabassini, A., From rebel rule to a post-capitulation era in Daraa southern Syria: The impacts and outcomes of rebel behaviour during negotiations, 2019, [url], p. 14
275 Hall, N., The aftershocks of reconciliation in Syria: Reflections on the past year, 17 April 2019, [url]
276 Makki, D., As violence flares up in Daraa, control can be an illusion, Middle East Institute, 3 July 2019, [url]
277 Haid, H., The war of assassinations in Syria, 18 March 2016, [url]; AFP, Cradle of Syria’s uprising turns into ‘chaotic’ south, Al Monitor, 29 August 2019, [url]
278 Abu Al Khair, Activists report a surge in assassinations in Daraa, 24 October 2019, [url]
279 Makki, D., As violence flares up in Daraa, control can be an illusion, Middle East Institute, 3 July 2019, [url]
280 Syrian Observer (The), Fifth Corps attacks Assad intelligence in Daraa, 2 April 2019, [url]
281 OHCHR, The “unreconciled” concerns of civilians in Dar’a Governorate, May 2019, [url], pp. 9-10
282 Middle East Monitor, Syrians protest in Daraa over military conscription, 31 January 2019, [url]; Euronews, Syrians detained, killed in southern cradle of revolt – UN, 21 May 2019, [url]; Al Jumhuriya, “Reconciling” with the regime: A deadly game, 5 February 2019, [url] reconciliation agreements must be implemented before the person concerned has to agree to be enlisted.\textsuperscript{283}

OHCHR confirmed 380 incidents between 26 July 2018 and 31 March 2019 in which civilians in Daraa governorate were arrested and detained by GoS security forces either from their homes or at checkpoints. In another 150 incidents documented by OHCHR, arrested persons were released after few days in detention. The reasons behind the arrests were unclear, with some reportedly due to ‘suspicion of terrorism’.\textsuperscript{284}

Others were also arrested, such as media-activists and humanitarian workers. According to Human Rights Watch, most of these arrested individuals were arrested were not charged.\textsuperscript{285}

The CoI reported that in Daraa governorate services and utilities, including electricity, water and gas, were not available for most residents.\textsuperscript{286}

\begin{itemize}
  \item \textsuperscript{283} Middle East Monitor, Syrians protest in Daraa over military conscription, 31 January 2019, \url{url}
  \item \textsuperscript{284} OHCHR, The “unreconciled” concerns of civilians in Dar’a Governorate, May 2019, \url{url}, p. 8
  \item \textsuperscript{285} HRW (Human Rights Watch), Syria: Detention, harassment in retake areas, 21 May 2019, \url{url}
\end{itemize}
4. Recaptured areas

The SAA and allied forces have recaptured some parts of the country, and the agreements that finally ended the fighting must be regarded as outright surrender agreements. The manner in which these deals are implemented on the individual level is ‘highly underreported’.

4.1 Aleppo

Aleppo was a divided city from 2012, when the eastern part of the city came under opposition control. This area was, in turn, connected to other rebel-held parts of the province surrounding the city, extending all the way to the Turkish border. The district of Sheikh Maqsud, a part of Aleppo, was controlled by the Kurdish Democratic Union Party (PYD) party, in agreement with GoS, but was handed back to GoS in February 2018 as Turkey attacked the Afrin-region.

In 2016, GoS intensified its siege of the rebel-held neighbourhoods, and in July 2016, it was estimated that around 275,000 people lived in the besieged parts of the city. In December that year, talks were initiated between Ahrar al-Sham, an Islamist jihadist rebel group, and a Russian negotiator. This resulted in an agreement whereby all rebels and their families were evacuated from the city, together with the vast majority of the remaining civilians, about 37,000 people.

The head of the Russian Reconciliation Centre for Syria, headquartered at the Hmeimim Air Base outside Tartus, told the Russian news agency Sputnik in June 2017 that more than 3,000 Aleppo rebels had been pardoned since August 2016. They were said to be among the 6,000 rebels identified by the centre. It is not clear what this pardoning entails, however, or how it occurred.

When the fighting stopped in December 2016, massive destruction had affected the eastern parts of the city, and almost no civilians remained in these areas after the evacuations. As of an August 2019 article, almost three years later, the rebuilding of the city had not yet started, and the original population was spread around the other parts of the city and the rest of the country. Some small parts of the old historic centre have been reconstructed, but these are not residential areas. In other places, individual have repaired their homes or businesses to the best of their abilities, and some cafés have opened, but no organised reconstruction project has been initiated.

According to August 2019 reporting, Aleppo is so close to the rebel-held areas that the western parts of the city are regularly subjected to missile attacks. In addition, the airport has been restored but is not open for regular flights.
4.2 Homs

In the city of Homs, Baba Amr district was especially destroyed in the war.298 The armed opposition enjoyed strong support in both Baba Amr299 and al-Waer districts, and while Baba Amr was recaptured in 2012, al-Waer was outside government control for prolonged periods. Like other areas, both al-Waer and Baba Amr were besieged by GoS for extensive periods.300

4.2.1 Al-Waer

The area first came under siege back in October 2013, at which time it was home to 70 - 100 000 people.301 After the Baba Amr district was captured by GoS in spring 2014, al-Waer was the last part of Homs under rebel control. As a result, many rebels from other areas sought refuge in al-Waer, and an opposition source claims that, already in 2012, the population had reached 350 000.302

Negotiations on an agreement for al-Waer started already in mid-2014, and a number of ceasefires were agreed in 2015 and 2016. The first round of evacuations took place in 2016303, but they only included a small number of rebels and their families, who were evacuated to an area in the northern part of Homs province.304

In February 2017, the Syrian army launched a new offensive on the area, and a month later, local representatives of the rebels met with Russian officers to try to broker a deal. As a result of the agreement that was signed305, more than 20 000 civilians were evacuated from the area between March and May 2017306 to Idlib province and Jarabulus in the northern part of Aleppo province.307 The evacuees reportedly included around 3 700 armed rebels.308

4.2.1.1 Consequences for the population

Some of the inhabitants chose to remain in the district. According to the governor of Homs governorate, 1 150 rebels chose to stay put and surrendered their weapons as part of a GoS amnesty initiative.309 Landinfo assumes that draft evaders will have to complete their military service at some point (see section 2.5).310

A group of around 600 people among those who were evacuated to the Jarabulus area chose to return to Homs shortly afterwards, due to the very difficult situation in the camps they were placed in. Local rebels allegedly tried to stop them, but they were eventually allowed to leave.311

In November 2017, a source estimated the population of al-Waer to around 45 000.312 In October 2018, the United Nations Children’s Fund (UNICEF) stated that 1 400 schools had opened in Homs (including al-Waer), and that the organisation has trained more than 4 000 teachers in Homs alone.313

---

298 Reuters, Former Syrian rebels flee, hide from army conscription, 10 August 2017, url
299 Lund, A., What would the fall of Homs mean?, Carnegie Middle East Center, 24 April 2014, url
300 AI, ‘We Leave or We Die’: Forced Displacement under Syria’s ‘Reconciliation’ Agreements, 2017, url, p. 48
301 AI, ‘We Leave or We Die’: Forced Displacement under Syria’s ‘Reconciliation’ Agreements, 2017, url, p. 9
302 SNHR, Al Wa’er neighbourhood residents join 12 million forcibly displaced Syrians. SNHR, 18 April 2017, at url
303 AI, ‘We Leave or We Die’: Forced Displacement under Syria’s ‘Reconciliation’ Agreements, 2017, url, p. 9
304 Reuters, Syrian rebels evacuated from opposition-held district in Homs, witnesses say, 22 September 2016, url
305 AI, ‘We Leave or We Die’: Forced Displacement under Syria’s ‘Reconciliation’ Agreements, 2017, url, p. 9
306 AI, ‘We Leave or We Die’: Forced Displacement under Syria’s ‘Reconciliation’ Agreements, 2017, url, p. 9
307 AI, ‘We Leave or We Die’: Forced Displacement under Syria’s ‘Reconciliation’ Agreements, 2017, url, p. 9; Anadolu Agency, 19 April 2017, Over 2,100 people leave Syria’s al-Waer for Jarabulus, url
308 Reuters, Syrian rebels leave last opposition district in Homs, 21 May 2017, url
309 Reuters, Syrian rebels leave last opposition district in Homs, 21 May 2017, url
310 NO-Landinfo drafter assessment
311 AI, ‘We Leave or We Die’: Forced Displacement under Syria’s ‘Reconciliation’ Agreements, 2017, url, p. 58
312 Irish Times (The), Stories from Syria: One family’s defiant stand in al-Waer, 6 November 2017, url
313 UNICEF, Children return to school in Homs, Syria supported by UNICEF, 22 October 2018, url
4.2.2 Baba Amr

This district in the old centre of Homs became a symbol of the uprising in Syria at an early stage, and it was one of the first districts to be seized by rebels in autumn 2011.\textsuperscript{314} The population before the uprising was around 80,000.\textsuperscript{315} It is also one of the places in Syria experiencing the greatest destruction. GoS regained control of the area through an agreement stating that the rebels would withdraw to other rebel-held areas nearby; not as a result of a reconciliation agreement.\textsuperscript{316} By then, the area had been besieged by GoS and subjected to massive bombardment from February to 1 March 2012, when the army moved in and took control of the area.\textsuperscript{317}

4.2.2.1 Consequences for the population

The district was reported to be in ruins\textsuperscript{318} and it is assumed that it will be rebuilt in accordance with the much discussed Law 10, which allows local authorities to enter into partnerships with private companies to reconstruct destroyed areas that were not originally zoned for residential purposes.\textsuperscript{319}

Despite the massive scale of destruction, some people have returned to the district. In 2016, UNHCR estimated that 3,000 people had returned, in addition to 200 internally displaced families from other parts of the country.\textsuperscript{320} Another source stated that 450 families had returned to the district by the end of 2017.\textsuperscript{321}

\begin{footnotesize}
\begin{itemize}
\item \textsuperscript{314} Lund, A., What would the fall of Homs mean?, 24 April 2014, \url{url}
\item \textsuperscript{315} UNHCR, Returnees and displaced in the neighbourhood of Baba Amr, Homs, 25 July 2016, \url{url}
\item \textsuperscript{316} Reuters, Syrian city’s rebel district still in ruins years after Assad victory, 18 August 2017, \url{url}
\item \textsuperscript{317} Guardian (The), Battle for Baba Amr – timeline, 1 March 2012, \url{url}
\item \textsuperscript{318} Al Souria Net, Al-nidham yuqarru al-mukhattatt al-tandhimi li-Baba Amru wa-yانhi hilm sukanihi bil-awda ilayha (Regime decides operational plan for Baba Amru, ending inhabitants dream of returning), 6 September 2015, \url{url}
\item \textsuperscript{319} SLJ, The new urban renewal law in Syria. Syrian Law Journal, 14 May 2018, \url{url}
\item \textsuperscript{320} UNHCR, Returnees and displaced in the neighbourhood of Baba Amr, Homs, 25 July 2016, \url{url}
\item \textsuperscript{321} Hogan, C., In a war-weary Syrian city, a wedding celebration, National Geographic, 16 February 2018, \url{url}
\end{itemize}
\end{footnotesize}
Bibliography

Oral sources, including anonymous sources

- Abed al-Majid, Khalid, Alliance of Palestinian Resistance Forces, meeting in Damascus April 2019
- International organization a, meetings in Damascus, March 2018 and April 2019.
- International organization b, meetings in Damascus March 2018 and April 2019.
- International organization c, meetings in Damascus March 2018 and April 2019.
- Syrian Arab Red Crescent (SARC), meeting in Damascus April 2019.
- UNRWA (United Nations Work and Relief Agency for Palestinian Refugees in the Near East), meeting in Damascus April 2019.

Public sources

Al Jabassini, A., From insurgents to soldiers: The fifth assault corps in Daraa, southern Syria, European University Institute, 2019,

Al Jabassini, A., From rebel rule to a post-capitulation era in Daraa southern Syria: The impacts and outcomes of rebel behaviour during negotiations, European University Institute, 2019, https://cadmus.eui.eu/bitstream/handle/1814/60664/RSCAS_2019_06.pdf?sequence=1&isAllowed=y, accessed 3 September 2019

AP (Associated Press), Syria’s Aleppo symbol of Assad’s wins and of enduring war, 13 August 2019, https://yhoo.it/2lIC8Wa, accessed 10 September 2019

Enab Baladi, Ba’da am… quwat al-Asad tasmahu bi-harakat ahali Duma duna muwafaqa amniya (After a year … Asads forces allows local population from Duma freedom of movement without security clearance), 26 May 2019, https://www.enabbaladi.net/archives/303407, accessed 1 August 2019

Enab Baladi, Tashdid amni ala al-kharijin min al-Ghuta ila Dimashq (Increased security for those travelling from Ghouta to Damascus), 7 July 2019, https://www.enabbaladi.net/archives/312783, accessed 2 August 2019

FT (Financial Times), Assad forces retake Syrian rebel stronghold of Deraa, 12 July 2018, https://www.ft.com/content/8b57c8b4-85ee-11e8-a29d-73e3d454535d, accessed 25 November 2019

Hassan, L., Fi dhull saytarat al-nidham... aswaq Duma mahjura fi ramadan (In the shadow of the Regime’s control ... markets in Douma are deserted during Ramadan), 5 May 2019, https://bit.ly/31bM1uU, accessed 2 August 2019

Independent (The), The search for truth in the rubble of Douma – and one doctor’s doubts over the chemical attack, 17 April 2018, https://www.independent.co.uk/voices/syria-chemical-attack-gas-douma-robert-fisk-ghouta-damascus-a8307726.html, accessed 1 August 2019

Majlis al-sha’b, Adu majlis al-sha’b: Muhammad Khayr Saryul bin Subhi wali datuhu Fatima (Member of People’s Assembly: Muhammad Khayr Saryul son of Subhi his mother is Fatima), n.d., http://www.parliament.gov.sy/arabic/index.php?node=211&nid=1073&RID=26&Last=250&First=0&CurrentPage=0& FName=&LName=&City=1&C at=1&Mem=1&Com=1&A so=1&or=1, accessed 2 August 2019

Nida Suriya, Mu’ana kabira ya’ishuha ahali Duma bi-Rif Dimashq bi-sabab ihmal nidham al-Asad.. birmil al-miyah bi-1000 lira suriyya (Population in Douma in Rif Damascus lives with major suffering due to the neglect of Asad regime... a bucket of water costs 1000 syrian pound), 30 July 2019, https://nedaa-sy.com/news/15014, accessed 2 August 2019

Nida Suriya, Tatawwurat kabira fi Mu’addamiyyat al-Sham... ‘Rusia tantazu’ha min Iran wa ‘Ali Mamluk yajtama’u bi-mumathili al-madina (Major developments in Muadamiyyat al-Sham... Russia takes over from Iran and Ali Mamlouk meets representatives from the city), 2 July 2019, https://nedaa-sy.com/news/14463, accessed 22 July 2019

SANA Syrian News Agency, Muhamid Rif Dimashq yatalla’u ala waqi’ al-khidamat fi Qudsaya ba’da ikhlaiha min al-silah wal-musallahin wa-awdat al-hayat al-tab’iyya ilayha (Governor of Rif Dimashq inspects services in Qudsaya after the city has been emptied of weapons and armed persons, and has returned to normal daily life), 17 October 2016, https://sana.sy/?p=445738, accessed 22 July 2019

Sayigh, Y., The Syrian regime has several military options as it advances after the Aleppo victory, Carnegie Middle East Center, 19 December 2016, https://carnegie-mec.org/diwan/66481, accessed 27 August 2019

SOHR, After 8 days of tight siege... the regime forces lift the siege imposed over al-Sanamayn city after meeting with dignitaries from Hauran with the Russian forces, 23 May 2019, http://www.syriahr.com/en/?p=128871, accessed 20 August 2019

SOHR, Public tension and discontent continue in al-Sanamayn City as the suffocating siege by regime forces on the citizens continues for the 5th consecutive day, 20 May 2019, http://www.syriahr.com/en/?p=128418, accessed 29 August 2019

Syria Direct, At least 270 journalists and media workers stranded in southwestern Syria as murky reconciliation deal unfolds, 10 July 2018, https://syriadirect.org/news/at-least-270-journalists-and-
media-workers-stranded-in-southwestern-syria-as-murky-reconciliation-deal-unfolds/, accessed 10 July 2019

Televiziyon Suriya, Ba’da ‘am min saytara tidham al-Asad ‘ala Duma... ma zala al-hisar mustamirra (One year after the Asad regime took control over Douma...siege continues), 12 April 2019, https://bit.ly/2KmF1V8, accessed 2 August 2019

Time, Idlib could be the last major battlefield of the Syrian civil war. But Assad won’t take it easily, 16 August 2018, https://time.com/5368872/idlib-syrian-civil-war/, accessed 14 November 2019

Terms of Reference

- How does the government treat the civilian population in reconquered areas?
- Which groups of individuals are called for military service?
- Which groups are targeted for arrest/violence?
- Are IDPs able to return to their hometowns after government reconquest?
- How are the IDPs treated upon return?